First Aid for The Freshmen.

IN presenting this pre-registration edition of the Daily Nebraskan to the newcomers to the campus, we hope to be of some service to freshmen who are somewhat in the dark as to registration procedure, and to those who desire to know more about student activities and facilities on the campus.

Of primary importance to the student on the campus, of course, is his scholastic life. In a school such as the University of Nebraska there are many departments, colleges, and schools—enough, in fact, to attract and train young people in almost any and all lines.

New students on the campus will find that there are many sources of satisfaction open to them. Along these might be listed scholastic work, athletics, social activities, work on publications, drama, debate, friendships, politics and fraternities and sororities in addition to many more.

Many newcomers will find that they feel the need for an outlet of their energies not provided by studying alone. The field of activities beckons them. Freshmen find plenty of opportunity for working with upperclassmen in various phases of campus life, particularly and more immediately on the publications.

It might be suggested that freshmen avail themselves of all the opportunities being offered them during the first week of the coming school year. Convocations, both general and the individual college gatherings, offer persons unacquainted with the campus, its facilities, and faculty members the chance to develop an acquaintanceship. Freshmen should converse with their advisers, for after all, these faculty members have been around the campus long enough to make themselves in many ways helpful to the fledgling.

Campus social and religious organizations are also coming through with a group of welcome parties or meetings. Through these mediums the new men and women are given a chance to make contacts and develop friendships which often prove to be exceedingly valuable and never-ending sources of happiness and satisfaction.

In painting this rather incomplete picture of the campus the Nebraskan hopes it has presented new and prospective students with information and announcements that will relieve puzzled minds. Due to the sudden flurry of events during the first week the freshman often finds himself held back by his own confusion, but if he mentally files away some facts before he comes to Lincoln the going probably will be easier.

Donning Red Caps.

This university, along with many others, cherishes a number of actual and would-be traditions. One of those, the one of most interest to the first year men, is the wearing of red and white caps. In the past many rebellious souls expressed the sentiment that their dignity was lowered underneath the freshmen headgear. Then they proceeded to become highly undignified rebels.

As a result of this divided spirit, or rather lack of spirit, in the past, the freshman cap tradition has been somewhat the laughing-stock of the university. If the freshman class wishes well for itself it will respect the custom this year, and don the caps. If the men wear the caps, and the women wear the buttons the first year group can actually become organized and remain an effective unit in the university during the four years of its existence. It is easy to see that the wearing of freshman caps can become the source of pride and result in the formation of a series of links between members of the class of 1938.

Some say traditions are petty and foolishly out of place in any institution of learning. But then too one must realize that traditions and customs bind humans together and make life liveable. Freshmen caps are symbolic of a spirit existing on a campus, and those in the first year class should pride themselves in the fact that they have the chance to carry a school spirit forward. And it's a lot of fun to be in with the gang!
