CHANTS

BY CHANCE.

W. C. Fields, noted stage and screen comedian, once said, "I have spent years working out gags to make people laugh. With the patience of an old mariner making a ship in a bottle, I have been able to build situations which have turned out to be funny. But, to show you what a crazy way this is to make a living, the biggest laugh on the stage I ever got was an almost exact reproduction of an occurrence one evening when I was visiting a friend, and it took no thinking-up whatever.

Last week end's dust storm should form an excellent basis for a new deal in "fish" stories. Professor Walton of the psychology department, was caught in western Nebraska last Friday and reports that half way between Grand Island and Ravenna, he ran into a storm of dust so terrific as to remind him of the reports of the settlers.

The next morning Dr. Walton reports that the dust was swept in unbelievable quantities from the houses, and shoveled from the porches like so much snow.

Then came the snow. The dust appeared to be hanging in the atmosphere and it dropped on the snowdrifts, creating some very weird effects.
