able that the ordinarily stiff fine will be reduced to a nominal sum in view of the despicable methods of which the chapters were victims. Violation of this particular interfraternity rule is not a matter for great alarm. No profound disturbance will rock the campus as a result nor will the fraternity system structure be in any wise weakened.

The profession of journalism, because of its position as a quasi-public utility, has been confronted by more than its share of problems in framing a code of ethics. Nevertheless, a high standard of professional conduct for journalism was set forth when the canons of the American Society of Newspaper Editors were formulated and adopted.

Certainly the tactics exhibited Tuesday evening when the newspaper in question, by dint of much clever scheming and planning, succeeded in leading the twelve unfortunate and unsuspecting fraternities to reveal their pledges, is nothing but open and deliberate deviation from the high standards which are supposed to govern its activities.

Had the incident been a news story of immense importance perhaps more than usual effort to scoop rivals would have been in order. But on a story of comparatively minor value for which a release date set to accommodate all interested newspapers had been arranged, the procedure reeks of meanness.

The campus may or may not soon forget this perhaps unimportant matter. Twelve fraternities will pay their fines, vow that the newspaper is at times a vicious institution, and remember long in the future to guard each new pledge list more closely from prying and sinister eyes. But it hurts to be taken for a ride. Ask the Greeks.

Taken for a Ride.

RIGHTEOUSLY indignant, presidents of Nebraska fraternities met in emergency session Wednesday noon to prepare a protest to methods employed by a local morning newspaper in securing and publishing partial lists of new fraternity pledges before their approval and release by the Interfraternity council.

An Interfraternity council rule provides a fine for any fraternity releasing pledge lists other than through the Interfraternity council. As a consequence, some twelve houses who unwittingly were induced to divulge names of their new members, stand in line to be penalized. In this case, however, it appears prob-
