DECEMBER BLUE PRINT CONTAINS GRAD DIRECTORY

A foundry scene designed by the university architectural department has been selected for the front page display of the magazine as it makes its appearance. The present issue carries the first alumni directory which is published that has been periodically printed by the magazine since 1931.

In addition to the grad directory the forthcoming engineers' publication features an article entitled "Engineering, Economics, or Psychology," by E. B. Lewins, research engineer of the agricultural college. T. A. BLAIR RIDICULES WEATHER FORECASTS MADE AT LONG RANGE

Lincoln Bureau Head Speaks At Sigma Xi Meeting Monday.

Prof. T. A. Blair, assistant professor of meteorology, and head of the United States weather bureau in Lincoln, addressed a meeting of Sigma Xi, honorary scientific fraternity, in Morrill hall Monday evening. Blair said that the best prediction he could venture is that the next fifty years will be much like the last fifty and that long range weather forecasting is still indefinite and confused.

Two methods of long range forecasting are in general use; the first, is the cycle method which utilizes a mathematical analysis and lists of cycles are compiled. The second, the correlations method, which Blair said was receiving a great deal of attention at the present time, takes into consideration the relation of the weather in one part of the world to the previous weather in another part. Although the method still offers a great many difficulties, Blair characterized it as showing more promise than the cycle method.

The speaker asserted that scientists are still hunting for the right method without knowing just how to go about getting it.

Bickel's Crime Class Takes Vacation to Attend Theater

Ickel Bickel Trickle, etc. (with apologies to the Awgwan, see last issue) stepped into the limelight again Monday with an unusually large quota of enemies, even for a law student. Monday's enemies were compensated by Wednesday's friends, however, (see Emerson's essay on Compensation) and the story isn't complete tragedy—except for the woulbe lawyers in the Crimes class.

This, the Story. The story goes like this: Vice president of frosh law class, Bickel, and a few of his colleagues, confederates, and stooges, decided that the crimes class should take a vacation. That was Wednesday. Teacher Orfield was agin' it. And the boys, believers in justice for all, refused to go to the show unless the whole class went along. Since some members of the class (never mind what they called them), including teacher, didn't believe that the crimes class deserved a vacation, the woulbe men of leisure locked the door and wired the windows (to insure justice for all.) If the class couldn't get in there would be a vacation, they reasoned (smart boys), and so they went to the show.
