Players Make Preparations For 'Cyrano de Bergerac'

Rostand's Brilliant French Masterpiece to Appear On Temple Stage Beginning Monday, March 30.

As a fitting finale to one of the most successful stage seasons they have ever enjoyed, the University Players are completing final preparations for the presentation of Edmond Rostand's most brilliant French masterpiece, "Cyrano de Bergerac," to be opened in the Temple theater Monday evening, March 30. Thus far this year the Players have answered their patrons' pleas for comedy with three amusing and successful comedies and two of the nation's most sensational dramatic hits.

The pending production is by far the most difficult undertaking they have attempted thus far this season and from all indications it will be among the greatest. Edmond Rostand is a French genius whose works, led by Cyrano, have been acclaimed as the greatest by world critics.

The play is set in France about 1640 and carries with it all the drama, romance, intrigue and humor of the period. It is a work written especially for one actor, Coquelin, who was in France what Mansfield was in America. In his production of the work Coquelin brought all Europe to his feet.

The play had its day in America behind the leadership of the immortal Mansfield. Playing the part of Cyrano, Mansfield and his company toured the entire nation.

Leading the cast of characters who will bring the famed production to the Lincoln stage for the first time in history will be Hart Jenks, who needs no introduction to stage patrons. The guest artist will be remembered by stage followers for his portrayal of Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, Brutus,

Marvin Seeks Abolition Both Class Offices

Senior President Proposes Creation Administrative Council of Present College Executives To Effect Class Organization.

Proposing the inauguration of an administrative council composed of executive leaders in each college and the abolition of honorary class officers, James Marvin, senior class president, announced a new approach and efforts for class organization which he hopes to put in operation this year.

Present executives of boards in each college, as the head of Bizad executive council, ag executive board, senior law class, engineers' executive board, would form the membership, necessitating the creation of no new offices except in colleges without such officers. The council, according to Marvin, would furnish direct contact with every student through the departmental organization of his college.

"Class organization, previously a political football, can become a valuable asset to the school if directed into lasting channels," Marvin declared. "Instead of social functions, which are short-lived in their effectiveness, we would propose definite projects administered by definitely organized classes in each college."

Suggested as projects by Marvin were: a three-day orientation period for freshmen in which the university administration, college department, and class members would participate; a joint alumni and undergraduate committee organized to further the interests of the university outside, with representatives working in each unicameral legislative district; renewal of friendly inter-college rivalries; use of the class council as an effective executive body to administer various student campaigns approved by the Student Council.

"At the present time, the Nebraska system of student government lacks an administrative body," stated George Pipal, junior class president, who is assisting Marvin in the project. "Such duties have been delegated to student council sub-committees up
