Activity Women Favor Cleaner Politics; Urge Abolition of Factions

Activity women propose that men's organization or the Student Council take it upon itself to clean campus politics by abolishing factions, scrupulously guarding ballot counting, and requiring every student to have his picture pasted on his identification card, so that wholesale collection of cards can't be made on election day by fervent campaigners. "Why not junk political parties entirely?" suggests Alaire Barkes, Mortar Board president, and staunch defender of honest political activity for women. "Merit and hard work, not affiliation, either political or social, would then determine the persons to be considered for offices. But of course," continues the activity woman, "nothing will be done until the men themselves feel and express disgust to the student council or the Innocents society, and demand action. They must desire and insist on fair play." "Factions should be eliminated by the Innocents," declares Virginia Selleck, who has been an ardent worker in the Mortar Board clean-up of women's politics. "Why can't men have real political parties, instead of narrow frat factions? If it could only be arranged so that each frat would not feel that it must have its 'turn' to run student activities, then the best man might at least be nominated." Elizabeth Moomaw is more moderate in her suggested changes. "I don't think that factions should be dropped. It is a good idea for men to have parties, and I don't think that they will ever change. However, since the student council has new powers and influence in campus politics, and is the student governing body it is up to that group to attempt to regulate factions." "Politics?" queries Sancha Kilbourne, student council judiciary committee chairman. "They will never change. At least I haven't noticed much change in political campaigning and electing in the last three years. Women's politics are clean—to a certain extent. Making elections on the 'up-and-up' will help, she believes. If

Levin Named President Of Council; Proposed to Rotate Party Privilege

Opening of Formal Season May Alternate Among Three Functions.

Last official act of the retiring Student council members was a proposal to rotate the privilege of opening the formal season among the three major social functions of the campus. Campus tradition of long standing has given the privilege of the first formal affair of the year to the military department for its annual ball. Yesterday at the council meeting, it was proposed that the added financial privileges which the first dance affords, be rotated each year between the Military ball, the Mortar Board party, and the Junior-Senior prom. Need Faculty Approval.

For the action of the council to be binding it must be passed by the faculty senate committee. If the senate passes the motion, it will go into effect next fall. A similar resolution was passed at the beginning of this school year and was protested by the military department on the grounds that it was too late for them to change their plans for the ball. The faculty committee upheld their protest.

Speaking in favor of the motion, Bill Marsh stated that the first party of the year gives such a financial advantage that it was unfair to the other organizations sponsoring parties.

Set Closed Nights. In view of the question regarding the dates of the major functions, no definite nights were closed on next year's calendars for them. Friday, Dec. 4, and Friday, March 5, were closed as the nights for the opening and the closing of the formal season. The Military ball and the Junior-Senior prom will be held on these dates, depending upon the action of the faculty senate committee. Other closed nights are as follows: Friday, Sept. 25, All University church night; Saturday, Oct. 17, Barb council's Dad's day party; Saturday, Oct. 31, Innocents' Homecoming dance; Friday, Dec. 11, Mortar Board party, and Friday, March 26, church night.

POLITICUS WONDERS HOW MEN'S POLITICS MIGHT BE IMPROVED

Point System Won't Clean Up Campus Election Situation. BY POLITICUS VII. What to do about campus politics? Should there be an organized point system, such as preached in women's politics, a revised two party plan, or are we going to suffer another year of such political maneuvering as has been so evident during the recent student elections. Anyone who is familiar with the methods employed by organized politicians during the year will readily concede the assumption that something should be done, but as to what it is to be, is quite another proposition.

The point system, which has been advocated by certain student leaders, among them women who are personally acquainted with the plan as it has functioned during the year, has supposedly worked commendably. Its champions boast a situation in politics among the fairer sex that exceeds the previous system by far. In fact, these same champions are not the least reluctant in advocating a similar system to be installed for the men in favor of the present plan.

Seven Anthropologists To Seek Relics of Sioux Along Niobrara Valley

Nebraska University's seven man anthropological expedition will pitch its tents in the valley of the Niobrara river following the dismissal of classes in the first week of June. Under the direction of Dr. Earl H. Bell, assistant professor in anthropology, the prehistoric relic hunters will be camping on the trail of the Dhegiala Sioux Indians. In an attempt to write a page into the story of the migrations of the American Indians from the south, Mr. Bell and his digging proteges plan to canvass several sites on the Niobrara which are believed to be fertile in remains of the Dhegiala tribe. The work will consist largely in the examination and classification of house types, pottery, and ancient fortifications. According to Professor Bell certain sites to be explored this summer may provide the key to the interpretation of archaeological discoveries made previously by Nebraska and other institutions. The highways of Indian migration along the Republican, Blue and Platt rivers in Nebraska have been thoroughly explored, but the Niobrara is still new territory Mr. Bell stated. Coming into northeastern Nebraska just before the beginning of recorded time, the Dhegiala Sioux, whose previous home had been in the vicinity of the mouth of the Ohio river, are believed to have left the area to be explored during the summer months, rich in valuable remains. The work of the expedition may be complicated by the discovery of vestiges of tribes who occupied this region prior to the advent of the Dhegiala. Mr. Bell remarked. The 1936 venture into the Niobrara valley will mark the fourth summer that the University will finance field work in anthropology that will be conducted on Nebraska areas. This work is part of the regular anthropology curriculum and is equal to three credit hours. With the exception of one student from Missouri, the men composing the expedition are from the University. One vacancy will remain in the expedition personnel, and may be filled by application according to Professor Bell.
