The Major Succeeds The 'Little Colonel'

Nebraska's athletic board of control didn't exactly relish the idea of accepting Dana X. Bible's resignation as athletic director and head football coach last week, but it had to be done. Without further ado, the board went into immediate action to secure the services of another capable athletic head.

Within five days they announced that Major Lawrence "Biff" Jones, who has made football history at Army, Louisiana State and Oklahoma, had accepted Nebraska's offer to fill the dual position of head football coach and athletic director. His reappearance into athletics was a complete surprise to every sports fan, but a very pleasant one at that. The athletic board of control deserves a vote of thanks for its efficiency in selecting a successor to Dana X. Bible who comes to Nebraska endorsed as one of the nation's greatest athletic figures.

With reluctance we say good-bye to Dana X. Bible. During his term as director and head coach, he boosted Nebraska athletics to an enviable place in the national spotlight. Only amateur athletes wore the Scarlet and Cream uniforms since Bible's advent. Subsidization was never practiced by the genial "Little Colonel," who looked on football from a professorial viewpoint."

But how will Dana X. Bible fare at Texas?

Little man, what now? Yes, it will be with a great deal of interest that Nebraskans watch Dana X. Bible and his Texans. But to the man that has lifted Nebraska athletics into national prominence we wish the best of luck.

Major "Biff" Jones has announced that he intends to follow the same program that Dana X. Bible has originated at Nebraska. Such a program means that he will attempt to draw up games with other top-notch football teams, continue to drive for more extensive football facilities and proceed along the same lines in regard to subsidization. His will be a big job, any man who could tell Huey P. Long what he thought, is big enough for Nebraska.

met its obligations to the sports lovers and taxpayers of the state. Whether or not the comparative salaries of the coach and professors can be justified is a different, more fundamental issue.

An Old Rag Custom: Declaration of Policy

We were talking about editorial "policy" in the Nebraskan office the other day and the first conclusion the staff reached was one voiced frequently by everyone from the man who sweeps out U hall to the dean of law school: it doesn't make much difference, because nobody reads the editorials.

The first point in our policy, then, will be to lure some readers to these columns of type.

There are obviously several methods to approach this problem of getting more readers. If we could run an installment of Mary Astor's diary every day, the job would be a cinch. But the problems at hand usually relate to the relative merits of a windbreak on the mall and mixed swimming

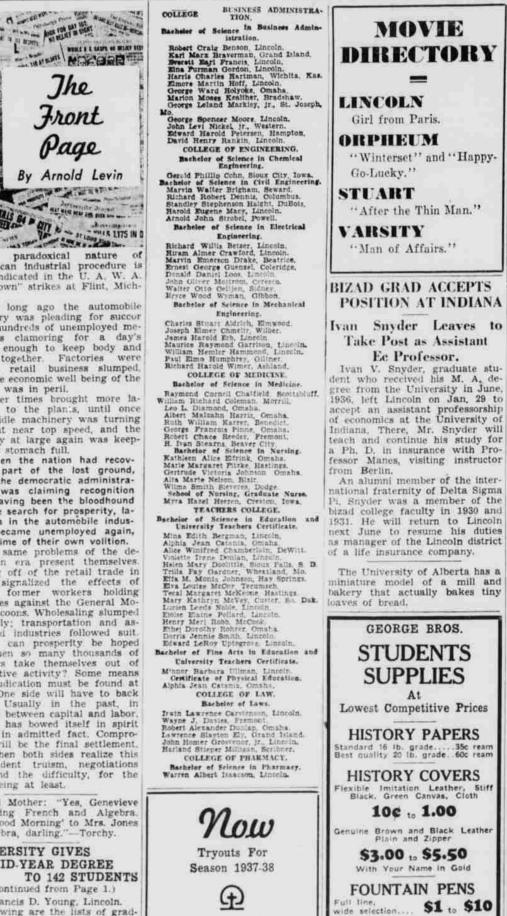

Our formula for the coming semester, until experience dictates a change, will be this: The style must be conversational and sincere. We'll leave the essays to the New York Times. The subject must in some way be related to the inherent selfishness of the student body, whether it's a twelve-thirty night or economic conditions. The idea must dictate the necessity for an editorial: the necessity for an editorial cannot manufacture an idea. Research must precede the writing, and action must accompany the words.

A. sit down" strikes at Flint, Michigan Not long ago the automobile industry was pleading for succor with hundreds of unemployed mechanics clamoring for a day's work, enough to keep body and soul together. Factories were closed, retail business slumped, and the economic well being of the nation was in peril. Better times brought more laborers to the plants, until once more idle machinery was turning over at near top speed, and the country at large again was keeping its stomach full. When the nation had recov ered part of the lost ground, and the democratic administration was claiming recognition for having been the bloodhound in the search for prosperity, laborers in the automobile industry became unemployed again, this time of their own volition. The same problems of the depression era present themselves. Falling off of the retail trade in Flint signalized the effects of 10,000 former workers holding Flint factories against the General Motors tycoons. Wholesaling slumped similarly; transportation and associated industries followed suit. How can prosperity be hoped for when so many thousands of Justices' Attitudes Change, He feels that the election landslide, which reflected public sentiment in favor of President Roosevelt's social legislation program, has somewhat changed the attitude of several members of the supreme court. It is his opinion that both Chief Justice Hughes and Roberts have perhaps changed their minds and will be more liberal with the entire social security program. There seems little chance however, that Justices Van Devanter, Butler and Mc-Reynolds have changed their out-look. Whether Justice Sutherland has definitely changed has definitely changed his attitude is still a matter of doubt, according to Orfield.
