on for the rest of this season as the mode of fashion.

Setting the official red and blue, the British Colour Council has introduced eight other colors . . . coronation green, St. James rose, Marlboro blue, royal red, royal blue, King purple, Cambridge red, Holyrood green . . . while American business has employed coronation design in printed drapery . . . coronation silk scarfs bearing brooches in the form of a crown . . . created lingerie . . . crown rhinestone pins . . . Prince Matchabell perfume "The Duchess of York" . . . coronet luggage . . . coronation Community Plate . . . Royalty Sets Mode.

In lipstick, gowns, coiffures, jewelry, America bows to the royalty that in England and makes way for the most elaborate of ceremonies in May.

Swishing trains of empire and princess-cut gowns, adorned with sparkling rhinestones, brilliant gold for contrast . . . dainty twinkling silver or gold slippers . . . high-swept, off-the-face, neckline—revealing coiffures . . . bear evidence of the definitely "dressed-up" formality in coronation regality.

Slim Princess Silhouette.

Coronation blue . . . garden party type frock of blue mousseline in white down front of dress . . . purple, gray, dull rose, and black adapt themselves to the slim princess silhouette with full length cape of chiffon topped by white silk faille collar, white faille flowers.

Rhinestones everywhere . . . on gowns, as evening bags, bracelets, necklaces, clips, and as a final dramatic accent, rhinestone jewelry in a "Coronation coiffure"

Coronation red, coronation lipstick, crown gold . . . massive yellow gold bracelets . . . coronation jewels, pearls and square cut diamonds and the semi-precious sapphire, choice of the Queen Mother . . .

Up to the abdication of Edward VIII the required headress was to have been the tiara . . . but now there will be a queen in the ceremony . . . and the peeresses must wear the coronet . . . the small inferior crown adorned as to rank . . . and American women have adopted the coronet, modified but still the coronet, of old gold; jewels and even flowers, which will, after the coronation, be transformed into clips and bracelets.

Pearls have returned to favor, for they belong to the traditional British court, particularly among the elder nobility . . . now it has become a custom to present the daughter of British nobility with pearls at her coming out . . . perhaps this, more than any other trend in the wearing of jewels, has been copied in America, pearls are in demand as they have never been before.

The "Eyes" Have It.

Coronation jewels . . . coronation make-up, jeweled . . . in tune with romantic styles of spring, with fuller silhouettes, flowers everywhere and costume jewelry all important. Jeweled makeup plays up the eyes, with a jewel around the eyes, eye shadow, emerald if they're brown, jade if they're black, and sapphire if they're blue. For formal wear a little bronze or silver eyeshadow is blended over the colored shadow and makes the eyes dazzling bright . . . for eyes that always sparkle, easy enough if only washed with a good lotion. For cheeks and lips a red coral tone has taken the place of the coral of former days, redder and brighter, which blends in with naturalness with the subtle undertones of coronation fabrics and colors . . . for the coming coronation has reached even make-up.

versity halls clearly showing in the old structures. The appropriations committee also approved of bill 531, introduced by Senator Charles A. Daffoe of Tecumseh, and embodying the governor's recommendation for a state planning board to study a ten year repair and building program for state institutions. Although the governor's proposal does not carry an appropriation, Governor Cochran recommended that approximately $25,000 of the general biennium be set aside for the building program. Of that amount, $10,000 would come from a new tax, the remainder would come from cash funds and balances.
