University Greets Young Musicians

As the fifth all-state high school music course opens, the campus is again bustling with activity—the activity of young musicians, who roam the malls and the halls carrying various shaped instruments. Over a hundred of them there are this year, taking advantage of the university's offer of a chance to advance their musical education.

They are the choice of the high school music circles throuout the state and, altho they are not skilled artists yet, they are youngsters who are interested and who are willing to work to attain a certain degree of success and to secure for themselves a certain satisfaction and enjoyment. They are "the more aesthetic type of individuals," according to one of the sponsors who confided that he could notice a difference between their activities and pleasures and those of the more athletic youths.

With no reflection on the "more athletic youths," it may be said that there should be a definite place for these "more aesthetic individuals" and the scope of their activities should be widened as greatly as possible. The university school of music has been feeling this need in the last several years, and has devised the all-state course primarily to maintain interest in music and encourage study, as well as to give high school youngsters a glimpse of college life and an opportunity to learn co-operation and independence.

Under the direction of George Howerton, director of music at Hiram college, who for five summers has been in charge of choral work, and Forrest Buchtel, who will supervise instrumental work, the program this summer promises to surpass those of the past. Indeed, with the enthusiasm that is being shown in the courses, the social program, and the athletic activities, it could hardly be less than successful.

In order that the various activities will be understood by all the high school students, a staff of reporters from the group has been appointed to write accounts of them for The Nebraskan, which will serve as their official bulletin during their four weeks' stay.

NEWS PARADE BY MARYLU PETERSEN.

High Jinx

Once more the high tribunal of the land proves to be a jinx to the president as the majority report of the senate judiciary committee deals a body blow to his original bill for reorganization of the Supreme Court.

After the blistering denunciation of the bill by the committee, there is more talk of compromise than there was when the bill was first introduced four months ago.

Building Decade

Completion of a $3,000,000 administration library building marks the end of the building program of the University of Texas. The program, begun ten years ago, has seen the erection of some 20 new buildings on the grounds at Austin and has seen the campus expand from 40 to 200 acres. The new building houses 500,000 books and administration offices.

The university obtains its funds from the state legislature and income from two million acres of land. The former equals 200 dollars per student and the latter a $23,000,000 permanent endowment fund.

Capital Balks

The situation of the labor front becomes more tense as workers walk out in two more independent steel companies in an effort to force company owners to sign labor contracts. John L. Lewis and his Committee on Industrial Organization find in the steel companies the first really stubborn resistance they have had since launching their program some months ago.

Heat Wave

The thermometer reaches 80 in England and the justices of the courts throw dignity to the winds and remove their wigs. We wonder what the justices would do in a Nebraska heat wave.

was 850, with an average of about 750.

Continuing last summer's activities, there will be softball teams, for both men and women. With Miss Leavitt in charge, the girls' team will hold its first practice Wednesday evening. All those who are interested in playing, but who did not attend the Tuesday evening meeting are invited to come to the next practice. Practices are held every evening at 7:15 on the field east of Social Science building, and plans are being made for games with out-of-town teams.

W. W. Marsh is in charge of men's softball this season. This team will practice every evening on the field south of Teachers college.
