MISS SCUDDER HELPS WITH PEACE CAMPAIGN

University Student Working With 200 Others at Emergency Camp.

Word has been received from Miss Frances Scudder, who will be a senior in the University next Green Bay Packers the night of fall, from an emergency peace Sept. 1 at Soldiers' Field, Chicago. campaign camp in Spencer, Iowa. Miss Scudder, along with 200 other college students, is giving her time and effort this summer toward raising $150,000 to do some extensive work in peace education in the rural areas of the United States. There are about 45 teams out over the country, according to Miss Scudder, six being stationed in the middle west. One team of boys is headquartered at York, Nebraska.

Thirty of the students who are in the teams, including Miss Scud der, were trained for ten days at an Institute of International Relations at Naperville, Illinois. At this institute there were experts in European and American relations, experts in government, and in education as speakers. Concentrated and intensive training for the short period was provided. The students were then sent to the various locations where they will remain until the first of Septem-

The work of the teams consists of speaking before various groups including Farm Bureaus, labor organizations, church groups, women's clubs, chambers of commerce, and service clubs; holding discussion meetings, leading study groups in international relations; initiating poster displays in cooperation with the young people of the community; organizing peace councils; and awakening an in-terest in the people as to the part that the United States plays in the world. "It is most important," Miss

Scudder writes, "to crystallize existing peace sentiment and to convey that feeling to the congressmen."

Included in the team of which Miss Scudder is leader are Miss Sally Morris, of Enid, Oklahoma, and Miss Ruth Aldredge, of Milwaukee, Wis, EVER LISTEN TO TIBICEN LINNEI?

AMES, Iowa, July 17 .- Shrillvoiced "Tibicen linnei" is hitting his choral crescendos and diminuendos again.

No, he's not a virtuoso. He's an insect, known popularly as the Cicada or "dog day harvest fly," and unpopularly as a strident noise maker who habitually disturbs noon day naps.

The Cicada's screech is produced by a "drum" or vibrating membrane on his abdomen. The noise, really a love ditty, always ceases before nightfall and whenever insect enemies appear.

Closely related to the 17 year locust, Tibicen linnei is much larger, is colored black and green instead of orange, and lives only 3 years in the ground.

The term "locust," loosely ap-plied to all Cicadas, is a misnomer. A locust is really a migratory grasshopper.

Dr. C. J. Drake, Iowa State college entomologist, says the Iowa Cicada is not harmful.

VIRGINIA AMOS GIVES JAMES BARRIE'S PLAY

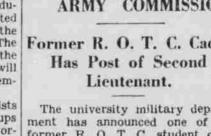

Speech Senior Moves Audience With "What Every Woman Knows"

In the last of the university speech department's "Tuesday evenings" in the Temple theater, Miss Virginia Amos enthralled her audience with the touching story of "What Every Woman Knows," by Sir James M. Barrie. This young actess displayed extraordinary ability in her por-trayal of a variety of characters which included a French countess; the siren, Lady Syble; the urbane politician, Mr. Veneables; and the proud Scotts, John Shand and the members of the Wylie family, father, David, James, and Maggie. In the first act, John Shand, a young book worm, is given 300 pounds for his education and, in exchange, promises Father Wylie to marry his daughter, Maggie. The story continues with the rise of John to a seat in parliament and the carrying out of his promise to the Wylies. Then enters Lady Syble who proceeds to lure John away from his wife. Meanwhile, Maggie has made herself indis-pensible to the humorless John whose speeches in parliament would be less effective without Maggie's added touch. Eventually, Maggie shows him that it is really she whom he loves and reveals the thing that "every woman knows" to be that a man prefers to think that he has made his own success even though his wife is his real source of help and inspiration.

At this time, Don Buell, member of the speech department faculty, announced that the department's final production would be Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice" on Wednesday and Thursday, July
