DIESEL SHORT COURSE

Engine Companies Unable To Make Trip Until Late Spring.

The second annual diesel short course which was to have been held this semester has been can-celed by Prof. J. W. Haney, chairman of the department of mechanical engineering. The univer-sity had hoped to be able to offer people of the state another opportunity to learn more about servicing of diesel engines, but because the engine manufacturers. who were sponsoring the program in cooperation with several midwestern universities, were unable to make the trip to the various campuses until late spring, officials found it impossible to fit it in with the great number of activities occurring from now until the close of school. Last winter more than 100 applicants from over Nebraska were interested in taking advantage of the instruction. Thirty-six completed the three weeks course and another enthusiastic group could have been expected this year. The schools cooperating with the five manufacturers besides Nebraska last year were Iowa State, Wisconsin, Purdue, Ohio State and Michigan State.

In addition to the fact that the spring program is already too full, Professor Haney found it impossible to offer the diesel course at this time because the faculty has bee overloaded for some time. The teaching staff from the agricultural engineering faculty would be unable to assist with the instruction at this time due to the tractor testing program which is about to begin. University officials hope, however, to be able to offer the three-weeks course next year.

40 Mile an Hour Mind Plus Speedy Car Equals Crash

Limitations Important Accident Cause.

We have given the individual with his 40 mile an hour mind an automobile which is capable of traveling at far greater speed, and we still wonder why there is an increasing number of fatal automobile accidents each year, Prof. W. F. Weiland of the mechanical engineering department of the university told members of the Lincoln interprofessional institute Saturday noon. The university educator took a different approach to the accident prob-

Prof. Weiland Thinks Driver safety education," he said, "will make the individual respond more quickly. Neither has improvement of rural highways in general decreased the number of deaths; rather, they have helped to increase the sped of travel. A study of the increased number of fatalities over a given period shows that the increase in highway deaths is directly proportional to the increase in engine horsepower. "There are two solutions to the problem. First, a governor must be placed on each engine to limit its maximum speed and, second, engine horsepower must be re-duced. The first solution is only a makeshift because the mechanically minded individual will find "No amount of schooling or list by reducing the engine power." nation
