Speech Defects May Lead to Inferiority Feeling, Says Expert

Much talked of inferiority complexes may frequently be due in children to inability to express themselves, says Miss Lucile Cypreansen, Nebraska graduate who has been conducting speech clinics in the Lincoln schools. Miss Cypreansen was recently announced as one of the winners of several prizes awarded by the George Davis Biven foundation for child development.

Functional disorders, organic ailments and emotional problems may all be contributing factors, she explains. Stammering, one of the chief difficulties, frequently is caused by emotional strain. In her work in the Lincoln schools Miss Cypreansen found that in grades averaging 300 students, 25 or more have definite speech problems.

In Summer as in Winter--

Students Like Dances, Movies

Student Union Conducts Poll
To Learn Favorite
Recreations.

What do summer school students like to do most in their leisure time, if any? When the directors of the Student Union found themselves wondering, they decided that only the students themselves could supply the answer, so they immediately issued a questionnaire.

Now the Union can say with authority that summer school students like to forget the three R's with a mixed dose of dances, movies, and talks by interesting people, for of some 1,500 persons polled, those three recreational activities came out most popular with both sexes.

Friday evening dances scored with men as their No. 1 choice, but the women evidently think Clark Gable and Robert Taylor more interesting than campus talent and name movies as their favorite activity. However, just to show that Myrna Loy and Madeleine Carroll are not totally unappreciated, the men give the movies No. 2 position.

Nebraska women indicate a fondness of things intellectual with
