Registration's Evils

Last week, Daily Nebraskan news editors were scratching their heads over the wording of the headline on the registration story. The old "Rag" standby—"Registration Mill Begins Grinding Process"—received its traditional consideration. But no matter how you say it, registration week is with us.

There are those students who annually make a lot of hullabaloo over registration. Instead of following a well-mapped program of study laid out in the freshman year, they are constantly changing colleges, schools and study courses with an eye toward "pipe" courses that require little study.

University students cannot be condemned for making changes motivated by uncontrollable factors. Economic conditions, for instance, may make it obligatory for a student to drop pre-made study and take less expensive bizad. It often takes a year or several semesters for some students to discover they are neither mentally or physically fitted for certain subjects.

This condition—brought out by the registration process—brings to light the growing need for further revisions in the University of Nebraska curricular setup. The regents showed the way last week by drastic instructional and administrative changes. And there appears to be more to follow.

One of the first major revamp projects to be tackled in the future is the lower division study plan which is now under faculty committee deliberation. This curricular change would group all freshmen during their first year and tutor them in a large scale freshman lecture course. After this general course of study, during which the yearlings get a sampling of all that the university has to offer, they are free to choose their specific fields. The lower division plan includes special aptitude tests which would aid the students in finding the course of study best suited to their abilities.

To all students, registration week is an important time in a collegiate career of scholastics or activities. To the seniors who graduate this June, it is the last time they stand in long lines and impatiently wait their turns to fill out detailed cards and programs. To the undergraduates, it is another half-milestone in the four or five years academic path. To the genuine students, it is another opportunity to invade new fields or to penetrate deeper into the scholastic unknowns of higher education. And to the poor activity students, it is the start of another semester in which the requirements and "pipe" courses are lined up to dovetail with the busy extra-curricular phases of college life.

Seventy Attend Barb Banquet

Dinner First in Series By Towne Club, Union

Seventy barb men and women turned out for the first joint banquet sponsored by the Towne club and the barb union Monday, Jan. 9. The dinner was the first in a series of monthly meetings to be held by the two organizations.

Harriet Lewis, president of the Towne club and Duane Essan, head of the men's group presided. Following the dinner, the group spent the evening playing ping pong and Chinese checkers.

Celeste Meyer was appointed program chairman for the next meeting of the club, Jan. 16. The dinner is to be followed by a business meeting. Everyone is urged to attend.

Feb. 13 was the date set for the next banquet of the joint organizations. All who were present Monday were invited to attend along with any other barb men.

Photographers Celebrate Birth Of the Camera

This week, thruout the world photographers are celebrating the centennial of their calling.

Just 100 years ago yesterday, in a small town in France, Louis Jacques M. Niepce, godfather of modern photography, gave the world its first camera and photograph. At the same time, he also presented us with the immortal "tin-type," when his pictures were developed from sensitized copper plate.

Daguerre's camera, considered magical in his day, could scarcely have foretold the major steps which photography would take in the next 100 years, when the world would consider wirephoto, fine photography and moving pictures as part of its routine life.

This week, in commemoration of Daguerre's achievement, Life presented a photo taken with Daguerre's ancient camera. The photographer patched the leaks of the ancient box with mending tape, stuck some over the aperture, punched a tiny hole to give the picture depth, and took the magazine's best photo of the week.

Nebraskans View Surrealism

As Scissors Stick in Wall, Bodies Float on Canvas in Morrill Exhibit

Pictures hang from scissors stuck in the wall, serpentine falls in tangled masses about the room, an iron chisel looks down menacingly from overhead, and Nebraska, both university and state, has its first exhibition of surrealist art.

The Fine Arts department has on display in Gallery A of Morrill the works of Frederico Castellon, young Spanish artist of the new surrealist school. So that the gallery will be in keeping with the spirit of the artist, Prof. Dwight Kirsch and his pupils have done the room according to their own interpretations of surrealism.

Tacks and Burlap.

Rivalling the pictures of Castellon for the attention of gallery-goers are tacks, chains tack boxes, pin boxes, bits of colored cardboard, drapes of burlap, bows of wire, and casts of heads and hands which provide the proper atmosphere for Castellon.

Surrealist art, according to a member of the Fine Arts staff, expresses the dream life or the sub-conscious life of human nature. The picture that Castellon draws are not what he sees with his physical eye but what he sees in dreams. Therefore most surrealist art is of a highly personal nature.

Floating Slippers.

Favorite surrealism subjects for Castellon are extremely high heeled shoes walking by themselves or hanging on trees, naked bodies floating in the air, figures of men in evening clothes had-buried in the desert or ocean, and long beards growing out of anything.

The artist is a find of the Mexican surrealism authority, Diego Rivera. His work is especially interesting because he has had no formal art education. The shapes of his figures show excellent draftsmanship as well as an unusual mind.

Also on exhibit are well known surrealist covers that have appeared on the front of Vogue and Harper's Bazaar, some prints from Life Magazine illustrating the surrealist school, and some explanatory articles.

The exhibition will be shown until January 24.

Awgwan Extends Contest Deadline

Humor Magazine to Call In All Entries by Feb. 5

The Awgwan contest has been extended until February 5, Virginia Geister, Editor, hopes to give more students opportunity to submit writings for a chance at the five dollar prize.

The same rule will be applied and persons whose writings appear in the magazine with the winning piece will be considered for positions on the staff of next semester.

Since the contest began the interest shown has been highly gratifying, and extension of the date has been made only to give students now busy with exam preparation a chance.

Reedy to Give A.S.C.E. Lecture

Civil Engineer Relates Summer Experiences

Describing his experiences while traveling through the southwest, Will Reedy, senior in engineering, will tell of some of the engineering projects he visited when he addresses the members of the student branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers tomorrow night at 7:30 in room 315 of the Union.

Reedy, who visited about 40 engineering projects during the first two weeks of last June, will tell about the Imperial dam and the All American canal located in southern California. He will also describe the Boulder and Parke dams in Colorado. The lecture will be illustrated by approximately 120 photographs taken by Reedy.
