

EDUCATION LEADS

This university is progressing. Perhaps it is new blood. Perhaps it is new interest. Perhaps it is merely the upswing of a normal cycle. Whatever the stimulus is, it is certainly a tonic for which this institution has been in dire need. Its affect is rapidly fulfilling the university's greatest deficiency—intellectual atmosphere.

Despite the denunciations of local anti-liquor leagues and protestations as to the amount of Nebraska's social life, students are accepting with approval the predictions of restricted enrollment. Courses of study have been made more comprehensive, subjects more exacting, and examinations more difficult. Professors seem to be cognizant of a brand new and more healthful order of things. Even the librarians report more popular and continued utilization of their facilities.

This week-end three different scientific organizations had regional or national meetings on the campus. Not long ago the university took the lead in attempting to thrash out one of the nation's greatest economic problems. These are merely recent examples of a list of activities which have occurred periodically thruout the year. The university and its faculty's initiative in arranging and sponsoring these gatherings is indicative of this new, or at least, revived, attitude. The real test, however, is the reaction of the people of the state and of the alumni to be graduated from this revised standard of values.

This altered outlook is not peculiar to the University of Nebraska. It is rather the general trend of all educational thought. The aim has been diverted from the ruinous theory of equal education for all, to a more sensible and advanced plan of education according to interests and abilities. The method has been raised from catering to the mentality of the mediocre student to the aspired-for class of the superior student. The best proof of the wisdom of this change is the manner in which the undergraduates, themselves the ones most seriously affected, have manifested acceptance.

These students, and the educators who have led the nation in these revisions, will never find their theories unsound. Youth naturally loves a challenge and springs at the opportunity for action. What he loves even more is crowning success.

A truly intellectual education, the development of faculties for clear thinking and logical reasoning, can and must regain its position as the essence of the system. The man who develops himself in such a manner is aware of his success and of his power. He is aware of the great debt, of the unrequitable obli-

Singers give recital today

Gutzmer students to present opera excerpts

Enacting a scene from Delibes' opera, "Lakme," will be students of Maude Gutzmer in their annual spring recital. More than 20 singers will take part in the recital this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Temple.

Taking the part of Lakme will be Jean Gutzmer, soprano, with William Miller, bass, as Nilakantha and Clyde Shoner, tenor, as Hadji. Mildred Slocum will sing the part of Mallida in this presentation, which is taken from Act I of the opera.

Duets, trios and solos will be the remaining features of the program, and accompanists will be Fleda Ziegenbein, Mary Tolhurst, Maxine Maddy, Jay Norris and Milan Lambert. This is Mrs. Gutzmer's last presentation of her pupils at Nebraska, as she leaves for Chicago in June.

gation of the institution and to the men who prepared him. Here lies the secret of a man's loyalty to his alma mater.

And here lies the secret to the future of that alma mater. It is not to be found only in contributions, nor only in public champions, nor only in spiritual support; but rather in the combination of all three.

It resolves itself into a necessary circle. The future of higher education, yes of the nation and its political doctrines as well, depends upon the output of our educational institutions. But the characters of those men, the kind and quality of their thinkings and reasonings, depends upon the institutions themselves.

Such institutions improve as the quality of their instruction and research improves. This is the guiding principle upon which the University of Nebraska now operates. This is the basis upon which the University of Nebraska is providing to the world that it is progressing.

Fair--

High Jack, both ridden by Dr. Ray Whitham, jumped to a tie once, twice, then three times.

As part of the pageant in honor of the reigning queen, 9 men and 40 girls presented a style show as the afternoon program opened, the girls wearing the dresses they made in home ec class. The men, escorted the girls in the style parade and did quick-change acts from sports to evening clothes.

Horticulturists win trophy.

Carrying a live apple tree loaded with choice red apples and representing the importance of Nebraska's apple industry, the department of horticulture won the silver trophy for the best float in the mile long parade which wound thru down town Lincoln and marched out to officially open the fair Saturday morning.

Buildings were crowded all afternoon with people viewing the open house exhibits, and fair-goers flocked to "Kampus Kapers," the "stupendous, colossal mellerdrammer," and to Mickey's Inn, which served Ferdinand and Popeye specials. Demonstrations of meat cutting, ice cream making, evolution of textiles and "silk" stockings from coal were featured in the campus displays.

"Aaron Slick from Punk'n Crick," starring Howard Gillaspie of Cortland, was given another hilarious showing in the evening, when boxing and wrestling contests were put on by students. Festivities lasted until midnight with a dance in the activities building. Well satisfied with the whole celebration, Fair Manager Ray Cruise, from Gurley, called it the most successful in years.

Ad contest ends May 10

Six firms offer prizes in writing competition

With only three and one-half days left in the "You Write It Ad Contest," sponsored by the DAILY NEBRASKAN in conjunction with local firms, students are rushing to file their entries before the deadline Wednesday noon, May 10.

Competition in the contest is very lively with many students striving for the valuable prizes offered to the winners by the six firms. Prizes include such items as 6 theater tickets, a Laura Lane slip, 2 pair of arcraft hosiery, riding breeches, a copy of "Mien Kampf," and a dollar in trade at the grill.

In addition to the regular prizes a free Cornhusker will be given to the student writing the largest number of prize winning ads. A novel hosiery mending kit will also be presented to every girl entering the contest.

Contest rules are relatively simple. All students are eligible except members of the "Rag" business staff. Each entrant may submit as many ads as he wishes, and all entries must be turned into the "Rag" office by Wednesday noon.

Enrollment in the weather study course at Hunter college has increased 40 percent over last year.
