New Hampshire students learn to race—but not their motors but sailboats

DURHAM, N. H. (IP). Unlike Sir Walter Raleigh who played hockey from school to learn sailing, undergraduates at the University of New Hampshire now take tiller and sheet in hand as part of their college curriculum.
 For this semester sailing is being taught as a course in physical education for both men and women. The course will carry the student from elementary theory thru actual skippering and racing.
 But it will not be all straight sailing for these students. Examinations and outside reading have their place here as in any other course at the university. The examinations will be on the work of shore school; the reading will be about boats of other classes and the history of sailing.

Golf, tennis meets begin this morning

New champions will be crowned in high school tennis singles and doubles, in golf singles play, and probably in team play, as competition in the two sports gets under way this morning.
 Johnny Huston, now a Nebraska freshman, won the tennis title three years in a row, but has left prep ranks now. Wallace McDonald, of Benson high in Omaha, who reached the semifinals last year, is a favorite to win. He may meet trouble from young Frank Ragen of Creighton Prep.
 Charles McNurlin and Bill Malone of Havelock, last year's doubles champions, are also gone. Tennis play starts this morning at 10 a. m. at the Lincoln Tennis club after pairings have been made at 7:00 in the coliseum.
 Byron Adams, hefty Grand Islander who won the golf title for two years in a row, has also finished his prep competition. The Third City crew also won the team championship but has only one man, James Traill, returning, so will probably see their title chances fade.
 Don Albin, Lincoln high, Paul Weiler, Hastings, and Emmett McAndrews of Benson are three boys who may finish well up in the meet.

Pioneers course will be the site of the meet, the first round starting at 9 this morning. Team play will be finished this afternoon, and the four highest after the 36 holes will meet for the individual crown tomorrow.

Newman club to stage Mother's Day breakfast

Newman club will hold a Mother's day breakfast in the XYZ parlors of the Union, Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.
 Bishop Kuchera of the Lincoln diocese will give the main address. William Sweeney, who will act as toastmaster, will be introduced by Bob Sullivan, president of the Newman club. Mrs. Nora R. Helfrich will give the response from the mothers. Father Obrist, sponsor, will speak on the activity program for the coming year.
 The Catholic faculty will be guests at the breakfast.
 Anita Koehnke is chairman of the table committee and John Becker has charge of the ushers.
 Tickets are 30 cents. For reservations call Lorraine House at her home Friday evening or between 9 and 10 at the Newman club office Saturday morning.

Lewis, and Vernon Wiebusch compose the recreation committee. Ruth Mae Pestal heads the foods committee, and Faith Medlar is chairman of the chaperone committee.
 Chaperones will be Mr. and Mrs. Arthur George and Dr. and Mrs. M. D. Weldon.

Iowa grads head 17 universities

Presidents include Martin of Midland
 IOWA CITY, Ia.—Presidencies of 17 universities and colleges now are held by University of Iowa graduates, a survey completed in the office of President Eugene A. Gilmore showed recently.
 This summary, the first of its kind made at the university, revealed that former Iowans are chief executives of institutions in a dozen states from Washington to Connecticut.
 Iowa graduates now head three of the nation's largest universities. The University of Pittsburgh has John G. Bowman as president, the man who once was Iowa's leader. At the University of Washington is Lee P. Sieg, once a member of the physics faculty here after his graduation. Clarence A. Dykstra, graduate of the class of 1903, is president of the University of Wisconsin.
 In Iowa are three state university alumni as college leaders. They are John S. Nollen at Grinnell, Orval R. Latham at State Teachers, and Martin Cone at St. Ambrose. Another president is Horace F. Martin, Midland College of Nebraska.

'Upped' coiffure dampens coeds' swimming ardor

CINCINNATI, O. (IP). The jinx which the modern feminine "hair do" has placed on woman's interest in swimming has been conquered among University of Cincinnati co-eds.
 A definite campaign to combat the effects of the "up-sweep" and curls in co-ed coiffures has been successful, reports Grace B. Daviess, assistant professor of physical education.
 "To begin with, we admit girls wearing their hair in curls is the hardest blow swimming has ever received," Professor Daviess declared. "They all think twice before going into a pool."
 "Our tactics in combating this menace consisted of two major parts. Swimming classes and periods have been re-scheduled for hours earlier in the day so as to permit girls to have ample time to visit the hairdresser's or arrange their own hair before evening or late afternoon engagements. Hair driers have been installed and are popular.
 "Second, and more important, we try to instill so much interest in swimming that co-eds are willing to get their hair wet. One new development along this line is co-recreational swimming."
