

Student groups win lower fares

Traction company sells tokens 3 for 20 cents

Climaxing a campaign begun last semester by the DAILY NEBRASKAN and a Student Council committee, originally intended to provide a university operated agency campus bus line, Lincoln Traction officials have agreed to sell fares on the present inter-campus bus at 15 for $1.

According to E. R. Heiny, general manager, any rate lower than that would result in an operating loss for the Traction company.

At a rate of 15 for $1, or 3 for 20 cents, students may save five cents on every three fares or 25 cents on a dollar's worth, a reduction of 20 percent of the former rate of transportation cost.

braltar across the Mediterranean thru the Suez and on to India.

The allies appear more able to carry out any promises they might make to Italy than Germany, but still Italian papers declare the axis is functioning full force.

Turkey is marking time, but still remembers the loss of Tripoli to Italy and her ancient grudges against Russia. Allied victories might draw her in on their side. The entrance of Turkey might draw the rest of the volatile Balkan states in on one side or the other with Bulgarian hatred of Greece and Rumania playing a large part.

Out of the spreading wave of propaganda and censorship comes the age old evidence that still "Engand expects every American to do his duty." Those who wish to sort propaganda from fact may be helped some if they ask:

Who expressed this opinion?
What are his motives?
What are the motives of the people who influence him?

Already people are attempting to fix the war guilt. Hitler draws most of the fire for his invasion of Poland. Polish border hostilities were probably Hitler's brain children, and the world hates many things that the Nazis are reported to have done. The immediate causes appear to be allied refusal to grant Hitler territorial demands which seemed only partly justified.

Complicated background. Behind the actions of the powers, however, lie many economic and political facts which are little understood by the public. Hitler's claims to the unquestionably German areas of Austria, Danzig, and Memel cannot be disregarded, but ignore his claims to the rest and still the allied treatment of republican Germany must be accounted for.

The bulwark of democracy has always been a strong middle class, but the allies forgot this fact in the case of Germany. They heaped reparation payments, high tariff rates, economic non-cooperation and other difficulties upon the Germany that was trying to be democratic. In desperation republican Germany resorted to inflation to pay the allied demands thus wiping out the savings of the middle class and the very basis of a democratic government.

It wasn't long until an Austrian propagandist with a flare for the dramatic was making speeches against obvious injustices contained in the Versailles treaty, economic warfare being waged against Germany, and the policy of encirclement threatening her. He appealed to the well known German pride until by swift, forceful action he became Der Fuehrer. The allied Franksteins had produced their monster.

Once this monster had gained control of that restless people he moved rapidly and with swift strokes sent goose-stepping troops into the de-militarized Rhine zone, withdrew from the League of Nations, re-armed in violation of the Versailles treaty, achieved the long-looked for anschluss with Austria, absorbed Czechoslovakia, snatched Neme—all without the shedding of blood.

And now Poland.

Then came Danzig and Poland. Britain and France gave Poland their complete backing and so Poland was in no mood to give any concessions to Hitler. The Nazis realized that with Russia's friendship they had nothing to fear from the allies in their invasion of Poland, and that they had only to fight a defensive war on the west.

Then came the actual invasion and the British and French declarations of war. The British empire came to the motherland's help and now war is in full swing.

English ships are blockading Germany, Nazi submarines are sinking British ships, French units are progressing slowly into Germany, feeling out the Siegfried line, and Nazi troops appear to be smothering out the last flames of Polish resistance. The Germans are within 90 miles of their Russian supplies and hope to reach them soon.
