elder branch of the ruling family of Bavaria. His mother's father was conservative member of the English cabinet and secretary of state for the colonies.

Descended from Duke of Alba. In 1929 the prince married a Norwegian-Dutch representative of the Von Schulenburg clan. His wife's mother was descended from the Duke of Alba, famous in Dutch history. The author believes that a wife should be her husband's "best friend and constant comrade." He never makes an important decision without consulting her, although he may overrule his wife's advice. His wife is at present in New York.

The author-lecturer is now giving a special short course in the university. His lectures, which are open to the public, are given at 4

Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays in social science auditorium. Thursday morning he will talk before the second university convocation on "The Role of United States As a European Sees It."
