British let Bremen sail home safely

Finns resort to ancient methods in stemming Red army advances

LATE.

Wire services reported English admiralty communique saying that the German pocket battleship Admiral von Scheer had engaged in heavy fighting with three British cruisers off the coast of Uruguay.

Last radio report was to the effect that the ship may have found refuge in Montevideo harbor. A warship came quietly into the port just before midnight, it was announced.

Today's news comment column introduces its new writers, Tom Davis, John Loos, and Norbert Mahnken. All three men are graduate students in the American history department. Their column, with news and comment on current incidents will appear daily under the name "News Roundup."

THE BREMEN AND THE BULL.

John Bull's ministry of information has announced that an English submarine which sighted the 20 million dollar German liner Bremen observed the rules of international law and did not sink the harried steamer which was enroute from New York to Germany via Murmansk, Russia, and a Norwegian internment. International law demands that warning be given and that the safety of those aboard must be assured before a ship such as the Bremen may be made the target of attack. This is one of the few times, to our knowledge, that a warring nation failing to sink or capture a valuable and legitimate prize has relied on international law as an excuse.

Releases from the reich's ministry of public enlightenment point out that a convoy of planes accompanied the Bremen thru the British mine net, and that casks of gasoline atop the decks of the Bremen would have been lighted and the ship fired before its crew would have allowed it to fall to hostile hands.

DOWN TO SEA IN TANKS.

In line with other press releases from the combat areas, the public is cautioned to be on the look-out for reports that the soviet tank crews are carrying life-preservers as standard equipment.

It seems that the Finns have torn a page from the military stratagems of Ghenghis Khan. It was the khan, you remember, who defeated one opponent by having huge cordons of logs bound together, and when attacking forces tried to scale the khan's mountain defenses they were greeted with a fusilade of rolling logs which crushed them before the attackers could seek shelter. Again, it was the khan who first released stored-up flood waters into the valleys and so drowned the forces of his adversaries. (This last trick was also used by the republican forces in the recent Spanish civil war.)

The Finns adopted a very simple trick. Picked crews chopped holes in the frozen surfaces of the northern lakes across which the Russian tanks were expected to make their assault on Finland. The heavy tanks fell thru these man-made holes and plummeted to the bottom of the lakes. "Civilized" warfare pitted against the stratagems of a thousand years ago so characterizes the
