Sig Ep, Phi Mu formals attract socialites Friday

Sigma Phi Epsilon will hold its annual dinner dance at the University club Friday evening. Some of the dates are: Clint Jurgensen and Alpha Chi Faye Irwin, Bob Krikac and Chi O Mary Beranek, and Frosty Wilson and AOPi Ruth Yourd.

At the Phi Mu formal Friday at the Cornhusker will be Jody Marshall and Marvin Kruse, Farmhouse; Dorothy Allen and Clayton Lavelle, Louise Frolich and Ward Brunson, Billy Green and Jack Hanlon, and Betty Heckman and John Hay, Phi Delt.

NEW OFFICERS

at the Beta Sigma Psi house for the second semester are: Charles Otto, president; Marvin Johnson, vice president; Wilfred Oelrich, secretary; Harold Oelkers, treasurer.

The Nebraska chapter of Beta Sig will be host to the national convention of the fraternity early in February.

RECALLING

traditions, Zeta chapter of Kappa Phi, Methodist girls' sorority, members and alumnae will dress appropriately tonight for a dessert supper in Ellen Smith. Miss Lenore Umphrey, charter member of the group—will tell about the organization of the sorority on this campus.

Pi Beta Phi and Alpha Tau

Omega will hold an exchange dinner this evening. Sigma Nus will entertain their alums at lunch Friday noon.

STEADY-GOERS

now are Marjorie Melville, KKG, and Darille Harlan, Fiji alum.

Acacias are wondering when the cigars will come from Francis Free, '37 grad and ex-law '39, who is being married in Des Moines a week from Friday. The couple will live in Sioux City.

Joining the pinned ranks is Lois Wadlow, Tri Delt, who now wears a West Point pin given her this vacation by Don Simon of Lincoln.

SIGMA CHIS

who are going to Vermillion, S. D., Friday to attend the Triad there are: Dick Faytinger with Tri Delt Lorraine Grant, Don Hartman with Beverly Bolstead of South Dakota, and Burdette Miller and Don Anderson with Alpha Chis Pat Griswold and Elaine Jordan.

A unique New Year's resolution is the one made by the Sigma Chi pledges. They are going to date at least once a week. Line forms to the right, girls!

It's the eternal quadrangle for Mary Bullock, who is seen variously with Porky Neurenberger, Smith Davis and Lawrence Lansing.

means that the semester grades of the students are in direct proportion to their test scores. If there is no agreement, the co-efficient of correlation is 0. The study revealed that correlations between test scores and final marks here range generally between .37 and .74.

Even when the correlation is as low as .45 the margin of guesswork is reduced to a useful degree, they state, and when the correlation is as high as .70 the margin of error is reduced by a significant amount.

A test such as the Ohio State examination is designed specifically to predict the level of achievement to be expected from students in college, state Dr. Gullford and Cox in their bulletin to the faculty. If such a test measures any one thing, it is scholastic aptitude, or the individual's specific abilities in a large number of courses. Test scores may therefore be used to predict either success in many courses, or the student's average scholastic ability.

Reporter leads weary life, he moans. Here's a sample

You are sitting in the Rag office waiting for it to be time for a class to which you have no intention of going. Your feet are on the copy desk. Your hat is slumped down over your eyes to shield them from the glare. You have your coat up around your ears so that the clatter of typewriters shall not disturb your rest.

Suddenly the editor snaps you out of a pleasant dream. "Hey you!" he yells, not even bothering to put a comma between the hey and the you. "I want you to go interview a professor!"

"A what?" you inquire sleepily.

"Who, me?"

"Yes you. Go over and see Hop-skotch, the chemistry prof."

"But I don't know anything about chemistry," you wail.

"What'll I ask him?"

"Never mind about chemistry. You go see Hopskotch. Get a picture of what he's like. Just think of it—he's been buried over there in Avery for 40 years. He doesn't come out more than once a year—like the groundhog. I'll bet 95 percent of the student body has never laid eyes on him."

Well, you find Hopskotch is a pretty nice old bird when you get to know him (after 20 or 30 years) but he won't say much.

No, he won't tell you where he was born or why, because he thinks nobody cares—and he'd be surprised how right he is about that. But you've got to write something.

The silence is positively deafening. All the questions you had thought up have vanished and, desperately you mention something about the books on his shelves being so big and weighty-looking.

It is just as though you had pressed a button on him marked "Conversation." His frigidly vanishes and he is all smiles as he leaps to his feet and begins talking about the rare volumes he has been collecting half a century.

Then he relaxes and you find he'll answer anything. He bores his friends to death and you're the first real listener he's had in years. You write as fast as you can on a piece of crumpled notepaper, using your knee for a desk.

It's nearly time for the deadline—you stutter your thanks and run out of the building.

Back in the office, notes are stacking out of all your pockets but you spend an hour trying to get the first line written. You laboriously decipher your hyroglyphics and wind up with ten typewritten pages of plain junk.

The editor tells you it stinks and you know he's right. You all but go into hysterics trying to rewrite it.

Finally, you throw your notes away and write what you really think of the guy. You read it over and see it's libelous. So you toss that out.

It is ten minutes till the deadline.

With an expression on your pan such as Thomas a'Becket must have worn while they were beating his brains out, you go into a trance. Your typewriter sounds like a machine gun.

You decide you have the Pulitzer prize right in your lap. It reads beautifully. There are a couple of grammatical errors but you tell yourself the sheer beauty of your prose will lay the reader flat on his back.

You throw it at the editor. He reads it and bursts into tears. He says if he prints it, it will ruin the paper. But the next morning there it is, right on the front page (or page 1, as we newspapermen say).

You feel pretty good. You decide you are Walter Lippmann, Webb Miller and Westbrook Pegler rolled into one. Your friends tell you they have actually read the first two paragraphs. You wonder if you ought to ask Professor Hopskotch how he liked it. On second thought, you'd better not.

But you make it a point always to look busy around the office.

You're afraid the editor might say "Hey you!" again.

ing the purest and cleanest air possible.

This is an indirect heating system, preferable because it is less expensive and more efficient than other methods. The indirect system is being generally adopted throughout the country. Although it costs more in cooling than heating, it is the most economical method yet discovered.

Exhaust fan will be installed.

When the smoke in the Corn Crib becomes so thick that the windows must be opened, the system is completely upset. To prevent this an exhaust fan is being installed in the kitchen and will be ready for use in a few days.

In the main lounge, the temperature varies only one or two degrees. The ballroom is very seldom heated—and during a dance, cold air is blown in through the fans to keep it cool and comfortable for dancers.

Lambert to take post at Purdue in February

Starting Feb. 1, Dr. William Lambert, '21, will serve as associate director of the agricultural experiment station at Purdue university. Since 1936, Dr. Lambert has had charge of the genetic investigations of the bureau of animal husbandry. After graduation from Nebraska, Dr. Lambert taught at Kansas State and Iowa State.

jawed mastodon, oreodonts and rhinoceros."

"During the latter part of the ice age man arrived in North America, and helped to hasten the extinction of many groups of animals," Schultz and Stout reported.

"The association of the artifacts of these early Americans with the remains of such extinct forms as the elephant, camel, horse, sloth, and four-horned antelope strongly suggests that man did have something to do with their disappearance."
