Psychological clinic helps human rehabilitation in state

Saving children of average intelligence from commitment to institutions because they were believed to be feeble-minded, is one of the important aspects of the psychological clinic program being sponsored by the university.

All types of guidance and mental problems, however, are brought to the attention of the examiners, according to Dr. D. A. Worcester, chairman of the department of educational psychology and measurements, and Dr. W. R. Baller. Tests have been developed which diagnose school work difficulties, music aptitude, art, clerical and mechanical ability, as well as examinations which reveal degrees of intelligence, and special abilities.

Aid to adopters.

Persons wishing to adopt children likewise find the clinic service of special aid, for again Dr. Worcester and Dr. Baller are able to determine the intelligence level of youngsters—including those of pre-school age and younger. Whether the behavior and mental problems are the result of physical disabilities, unhealthy environment, or even poor reading ability, the clinic staff has been able to spot the difficulty and effect a corrective program which has generally resulted in the marked improvement of each subject.

Since the establishment of this type of field service and its accessibility now to people over the state, Dr. Worcester and Dr. Baller, in charge of the teachers college testing program, have been able to salvage many children and adults who have been regarded as unable to learn, and to help others find occupations which are best suited to their talents. This recently enlarged testing program marks the beginning of a new and greater human rehabilitation program for Nebraska.

Distribute exams.

Psychological examinations and counseling service have always been available to those who could come to the university laboratories, but only recently has the clinic staff taken their program to towns over the state.

Since extension of the program to the more distant areas, increasing numbers have taken advantage of it. Last year Dr. Worcester reported that forty-three schools as well as twenty-two state and private agencies sent individuals to be tested. In all, approximately 2,800 persons have been assisted by the testing staff.

like spring. You neglect your work and want to be with him. You wait anxiously for his telephone call each night even if it's only to say hello.

Dick Bailey, arts and sciences freshman.

Yes. You can't tell all at once. It takes quite a while to see if it's the real thing. You get a thrill out of just being with her and you want to take her places all the time.

Lowell Armstrong, arts and sciences freshman.

Yes. You can tell the first night you go out with her.

Keith Abart, former engineering student.

Yes. But when you ask how I knew I begin to wonder if I was. It happens gradually. She moved away and married somebody else. Absence doesn't make the heart grow fonder.

Leo Miller, arts and sciences freshman.

No. But I think most young people go through enough puppy love so that when the real thing comes along, they know it instinctively. Karl Barnesberger, engineering sophomore.

No. My psychological training has been too informative. It destroys all romantic illusions.
