DEAR EDITOR:

Restrict dances to students

Dear Editor:

It is with much interest that I write this letter—an interest which should be that of the entire student body. It is concerning the dances in the Student Union.

As I have been observing from time to time throughout the year, students must present identification cards to attend dances in the Student Union. This has not been carried out and due to this fact the ballroom has become a rendezvous for the persons who frequent the dance halls not patronized by students of the university. This creates an antagonistic attitude toward the Student Union, not only from the students but from alumni of the university whose cooperation we desire in order to boost our institution.

It has been remarked by several students that they would not take a date to the Student Union dances and it is a justified statement. We pay our Student Union fee of $3.00 each semester to provide entertainment supposedly for ourselves, however, the present status renders this entertainment very unattractive to the students. Many students will not even go in the Union because of the manner in which it is operated.

If these dances are to be attended by the student body as a whole and not fifty percent students and fifty percent outsiders, there should be a change in the policy of operating the dances. Fifty percent is a very liberal estimate of students attending these functions. A good many students cannot afford other recreations, but do not care to take advantage of what they are compelled to pay for, because of the calibre of the majority of the crowd.

The board which has the power to regulate these activities should make an endeavor to curb the present situation, thus making our Student Union Ballroom a recreation center for students rather than a cheap dance hall for outsiders.

Respectfully,

Clint Jurgensen.

Dr. Popenoe was here to tell students how to know it's love we are wondering, just wondering. When you wonder, you kinda think over a lot of angles to a thing. When angles are thought over, you are bound to get a few points.

We have suggested a few of these things before but they fit the situation at the present.

Love can best be defined as a gross exaggeration of the difference between one person and everybody else.

How can you recognize love? You know you have it when you have a feeling that you feel that you are going to have a feeling that you have never felt before.

Some people say that love is blind but it seems that there are plenty of people who are willing to make spectacles of themselves for it.

If it is blind, maybe it is so in order to give the homely folks a chance.

Of course, Popenoe has his ideas, too.

It takes $163.18 to go to all the dances given during the academic year at Pittsburg according to a survey made recently by the "Pitt News." The figure includes the cost of going to 31 dances plus the cost of food and corsages for the most important affairs. Let it never be said that it doesn't cost money to be a college man.

This one was picked up from the "Ward-Belmont Hyphen." We pass it on and dedicate it to the editors of the "Awwgan."

This business of thinking up jokes
Gets one a little bit daunted;
The ones you want we can't print
And the ones we print aren't wanted.

"The Creightonian," official paper of our neighboring university in Omaha, last week, carried a plea in behalf of the women students—that they be given a voice in student affairs. It seems that at Creighton the women don't get a chance to vote—not even on leap year.

Citation for the latest bit of campus service should go to the "Daily Iowan" which recently finished a crusade to clean up several old campus fire-traps. Only a one-day crusade was necessary before university authorities put sprinklers in the buildings in question.

Another housing controversy is going full speed at Kansas State where irate rooming house owners, last week declared that they would not obey the university's new single bed regulation. "The students have to live somewhere, and if none of us comply with the ruling what can the college do?" they said.

MY DAY—A LA CONGRESS.

While affairs in the world at large have been shifting with amazing rapidity, the doings of Congress have followed a singularly unexciting program. The regularity with which the national legislature has proceeded to do just what was predicted has given renewed courage to many of our political prognosticators.

As nearly everyone had believed would be the case, Congress has found its proposed cutting of expenditures a difficult task. Within the past week appropriations for the CCC and the NYA have been increased over the figures proposed in the original budget. Economy has once again proven to be a noble ideal, but the compelling facts of an election year make congressmen more than willing to be liberal with government funds.

Predictions as to the fate of the reciprocal trade agreements have thus far proven true. Having safely passed through the house of representatives, the trade agreements program found senate opposition more determined. Friday's vote on the Pittman amendment, which would have required senate ratification of any agreements negotiated by the president, indicates that the Hull program will in all probability pass the senate by a very narrow margin.

Even the Dies committee has followed an unusually uninspired course. Nothing more spectacular than the fact that Snow White and Pinocchio both evidenced communistic sympathies has come out of the current investigation—which, it must be added out of justice to the Texan, are just beginning. Yet it must trouble the publicity-conscious Dies that his revelations thus far have produced nothing more than ill-concealed yawns.

Senator Norris has been strikingly consistent, if only in his unpredictability. Nebraska's senior senator has managed to maintain the position of prestige which he has gained during the past, even though the field of activity is necessarily limited by the very inactivity of Congress. Yet Norris has been one of the senators most consistently opposing the dropping of the Hull program, and the resultant consequences which would "put Congress back in the business of tariff logrolling."

Within the last few days Norris has placed his stamp of approval on at least one candidate in the current primary race, former governor Arthur J. Weaver, republican aspirant for the United States' senatorship. Avoiding the heated contest for the democratic nomination for the same position, Norris announced that he considered Weaver the best qualified candidate in the field. It is not surprising that such a "boost" should come from the senator, for the careers of the two men concerned are parallel in that both have approached public problems from a point of view based not solely on partisan politics.

Weaver has let it be known that he considers some few features of the New Deal to be of permanent worth, and that a simple campaign of vilification is hardly an ample cause for seeking office. Support of a progressive-minded and independent candidate thus comes from an office-holder of the same make-up.

It's educational, as the questions asked are on various subjects and test the knowledge of the contestants. I haven't seen many of the questions, but, judging from the ones I have seen, they're not too stiff for the average college student."

Hortense Casady, arts and science junior and member of the Kappa Alpha Theta team.

"The quiz is an entertaining competition drawing fraternities and sororities together, but otherwise not especially beneficial. It is amusing to both participants and spectators, and is certainly in keeping with the fad that is sweeping the country."

Clinton Wilkinson, arts and sciences freshman

"I really don't know enough about the quiz to express an opinion, but I suppose it is a good thing. The questions seem to be well selected and those on campus information should help students to learn more about the university."

Montee Baker, ag college senior

"I enjoy the quiz, but I believe it is entirely a matter of chance as to who wins, as the questions are extremely variable in their difficulty. I believe the questions should be more standardized. The premium and the quiz itself stimulate mental activity."

Everett Egan, arts and sciences freshman

"I haven't paid a great deal of attention, but I think the quiz is a grand idea. More quizzes of this sort should be conducted. We can see what a hit they made in radio, they could do the same on the campus."

Annette Bierbaum, arts and sciences junior, member of the Alpha Xi Delta team.

"The quiz is all right, and the questions should help one to gain general information. Judging from the attendance at the preliminaries, students aren't interested in the quiz. This, I believe, is because they don't know about the quiz. More publicity is needed."

Larry Nelson, arts and sciences freshman

"It sounds like a good deal. It should inspire some real thinking among students."

George Cunningham, arts and sciences freshman

"The quiz creates a better atmosphere for scholastic work. It's a disturbance, but for the good."

Jack Hacker, engineering sophomore

"Good idea. Interesting and educational."

Masons hear Rosenlof

Dr. G. W. Rosenlof of the department of secondary education will speak tonight before Masonic lodge No. 54 on "Safeguards to Democracy."

Fraternity house presidents at Oregon State College recently voted overwhelmingly to continue the current ban on corsages at their formal dances.

Would perfect man.

Hooton, who, according to Life magazine, is "one of the most gifted, versatile and articulate men in the history of science," says in his book that "we must improve man before we can perfect his institutions and make him behave."

"If the generations to come can be emancipated from the worthless members of the human race, it will be a comparatively simple matter to perfect social and political institutions."

"We know far less today about making men than making automobiles, and we act far more intelligently in raising crops than in raising children," continues Hooton. "As a matter of fact a good deal more of human thought and effort has gone into devising and perfecting motor engines than human engines. We are really more interested in the quality of our automobiles than in that of our progeny."

who will attend the premier of "Those Were the Days," at Galesburg, Ill. The picture is based on the "Old Siwash" stories written about Knox college at the turn of the century.

Hosts and hostesses at the premiere will be students at Knox and stars of the picture, including Bonita Granville and William Holden.

While at Knox, one of the 12 "American beauties" will be picked by a committee of judges as the most typical American college girl and crowned All-American College Queen. The All-American College Queen will receive a free trip to Hollywood where she will be entertained by the stars, and will be screen-tested by Paramount studios.
