Swinging around the sporting alleys:

Maj. Biff Jones stopped in Norman, Okla., for a spell Tuesday and offered these words of wisdom:

"Stanford's great backfield of Albert, Kmetovic, Galiarneau and Standlee would be just as dangerous from the Warner, Notre Dame or short punt as it was from the T."

Jones said he would like to see Nebraska prep schools adopt the T to improve their ball handling.

"Because of our cold weather, Nebraska high school players who come to us don't know as much about passing the ball as boys farther south," Jones elaborated.

There ought to be a story in this little item which should break in the east very soon:

Coach Frank Leahy of Boston college has not yet signed his contract for next year.

Big Six basketball coaches are taking their turns doing scouting. Last Monday night, Jack Gardner of Kansas State inspected the Iowa State-Kansas mix. While last Saturday night, Coach Ad Lewandowski looked over Kansas State and Oklahoma battle in an overtime game.

The Wildcat K-Club of Kansas State wanted to get Biff Jones as main speaker at a banquet. However, the Major was not available. He's having a hard enough time trying to stow away food around the Nebraska potatoes and gravy circuit.

Ag varsity team beats city cagers

Ag varsity Nebraska ball team edged out a narrow win over the city campus varsity with a 27-25 score Tuesday evening on ag campus. Jeanette Mickey and Mary Robinson played an outstanding game for the city girls.

Other members of the city campus team included Marshall, Kouba, Flebbe, Linscott, Bates, Holtorf, Miller, Buck and Jackson.

Aggie cagers seek revenge over Huskers

MANHATTAN, Kas. Jan. 16.—Kansas State's Wildcats, encouraged by their surprise victory over Oklahoma, will defend their home court again Friday—this time seeking revenge for a 33 to 23 licking suffered at the hands of Nebraska at Lincoln ten days ago.

Coach Jack Gardner thinks highly of the Huskers, especially their star guards, Sid Held and Don Fitz. "Nebraska is a team of tremendous height, speed and potential scoring ability," said the K-State mentor. "Even in defeat Nebraska has scored. We're going to have to play better ball Friday than we did against the Huskers at Lincoln or than we did against Oklahoma if we hope for victory."

Gardner admitted a lack of men capable of guarding Fitz and Held. But he believes his K-Staters will be tougher as a result of confidence gained by the win over the Sooners.

Seniors do duty

A pair of dependable seniors—Forward Chris Langvardt and Guard Norris Holstrom—came through in the final seconds of the Oklahoma contest to provide K-State with its victory chance in one of the most thrilling contests ever played in Nichols gymnasium.

With only five seconds remaining in the regulation game, Oklahoma led 36 to 34 and had possession of the ball out of bounds. Holstrom intercepted the pass into the court, whipped the ball down to Langvardt who flipped through a one-handed shot to tie the count as the gun sounded. Holstrom and Larry Beaumont, guard, accounted for the five points in the overtime period which gave K-State the game, 41 to 36.

Gardner was pleased with the fight and determination of his ball club. But he blamed poor ball handling and a temporary weakening of the defense for the Wildcats' loss of the lead in the last five minutes after they had been ahead from the outset.

The same quintet which took the floor against the Huskers at Lincoln will start Friday. This group includes Jack Horacek and Dan Howe, forwards; Tom Guy, center; and Holstrom and Beaumont, guards.

Three years after completion of flight training and appointment as ensign, aviation cadets are eligible for promotion to the rank of lieutenant. Since the candidates, if accepted, would be in military service, aviation cadets are exempted from the draft automatically.

Students interested in applying should write the United States Aviation Base, Kansas City, Kas. Further information may be secured through personal interview at the office of the military department, located in Nebraska hall.

Gloomy days but sporting world spins around

By Bill Flory.

Gloomy is the day but bright is the sports world. Probably the brightest thing in this sporting country is the selection of a coach to fill the shoes left vacant by Husker alumnus, Francis Schmidt, at Ohio State. Paul Brown, Ohio high school coach is the new mentor. Brown's selection has the approval of the Ohio fans.

Irvin S. Cobb, Lincoln visitor for a few days says, "I've studied the international situation for many years and it seems to me that the Cornhuskers have a swell chance next year."

Yeager to move.

Our neighbor, Iowa State, might lose its pigskin mentor after all. Jim Yeager has finally consented to an interview with the University of Colorado officials who are in search of a football coach.

Just when we were beginning to think that the Stanford Indians were the best blockers ever, someone come up with the fact that Marty Brill, Loyola head man, was the greatest blocking back playing for Knute Rockne.
