

After 'Life's' pictures . . .
Mythical planet Atzor faces annihilation thru civil war
 . . . by disgusted members

—Lincoln Journal.

PICTURED ABOVE are Lee Pelton and Dick Lindberg, who run the kingdom of Atzor, imaginary planet which now has internal strife.

There's civil war afoot in Atzor! Following the recent publicity in Life magazine of the imaginary kingdom ruled by certain university students, some of these students say the whole thing is an outgrown kids game and they don't wish to be included in it. The "kids stuff" was started when the founder, Lee Pelton, was in junior high school. Out of a brain child of his came the kingdom which includes several countries ruled by kings, queens, dukes, duchesses and maybe even a dictator or two.

"Darned foolishness."

Following the pictures in Life some of the Atzorians said they thought it was "darned foolishness." They reported that they had outgrown that sort of thing long ago and went on to say that the costumes which were worn in the pictures were rented.

There seems to be dissension in the ranks also because the members say that they really aren't part of it since it is really run by Pelton and another student, Dick Lindberg.

The members of this imaginary planet carry on wars, swap treaties, compile genealogies and map cities. They have a language all their own and really carry on this international politics business to the finest degree.

Campus comment.

There has also been some comment on the campus since the pictures appeared in Life magazine. Students definitely state that they do not want people to think this sort of business is associated with normal student activity. In fact they "wonder why Life ever ran the darn thing."

It has all been quite a joke. One thing the students want to make sure. That people over the country won't think this is typical of Nebraska students.

According to Pelton, the recent publicity has been wonderful for Atzor. It has brought them out of a slump. They plan to do big things now. Some of the members however aren't so sure. One scoffed that they've stooped to taking in high school kids.

As far as most Nebraska students are concerned, it should be taken back to high school, even junior high. The farther the better.

Capitol Personalities

GEORGE W. BEVINS.

Like a gentleman of similar name in the British House of Commons, Senator George W. Bevins is the Nebraska legislature's chief champion of labor.

The senator is a packing house worker from South Omaha, where he has lived for 40 years. "I was elected," he said, "to come down here and do everything I could for the laboring man."

Chief among Senator Bevins' proposed legislation designed to help the laborer is L. B. 41. That measure would extend collective bargaining rights to those workers who do not now receive those rights under national law; in other words, those not engaged in interstate commerce. Last week L. B. 41 was defeated.

But the introducer is confident that under different conditions in the future, a similar bill will become law. He declared that: "It is not these senators who defeated the bill; it is the traitorous leaders of labor." Senator Bevins contended that the labor leader racketeers, and in this particular case those who appeared before the labor committee supposedly favoring L. B. 41, are defeating the purpose of organized labor. "When we get new labor leaders, the bill will pass," predicted the senator.

Besides serving on the labor committee, Senator Bevins is also a member of the government and enrollment and review committees.
