

They brought in the bacon . . .

Above are members of the meat judging team who won first, second and third places individually in national collegiate competition at Fort Worth, Tex., last week. The individual victories added up to a team title.

Star of the show was Richard Crom, Pawnee City (extreme right) who placed all classes correctly—believed to be the first time this feat has been achieved in any national contest.

Second was Vern Kerchberger

In individual classes, the Nebraska team members together took first, second and third on pork and third on beef.

This is the junior team which will be eligible for national competition at Kansas City and Chicago again next fall.

Home ec association to hold Hospitality Day for visitors

In an effort to acquaint senior high school girls from surrounding schools with ag college the Home Economics association will sponsor Hospitality Day, Saturday, March 22 on ag campus. The visiting girls will be shown the work done by university home economics students.

The day will open with registration in ag hall at 9 a. m. followed by a program in room 306 of ag hall, consisting of musical numbers by the ag college sextet; greetings by Winifred White, president of the Home Economics association, and by Miss Fedde, head of the department of home economics; a round table discussion on "Opportunities On and Off the Campus," led by Lillian Klemm; and a short talk by Sophie Wakim on "Why I Chose the United States."

Square dancers demonstrate.

Beginning at 11, the ag college square dance team will present a demonstration in the college activities building as an example of extracurricular activities.

Following lunch, guests will return to ag hall, where they will be shown movies of the 1940 Farmers' Fair, taken by Dr. F. D. Keim, professor of agronomy. A style English comedienne . . .

Gracie Fields captivates her audience

. . . at UN coliseum

By Mary Adelaide Hansen.

"There'll always be an England, and England shall be free, if England means as much to you, as England means to—" Gracie Fields.

When first she strode on the stage and gaily waved a greeting to the audience, the crowded coliseum was wound around her little finger. Combining the technique of the good old-fashioned English Music Hall with sophisticated comedy, Gracie Fields gave her middle western audience a taste of the continental entertainment that has captivated kings and cockneys alike.

A dozen rolled into one.

Gracie Fields really is a conglomerate of Bea Lillie, Gertrude Lawrence, Baby Snooks, and Charlie McCarthy, and her spontaneous slap-stick completely won over doubtful members of the audience who, as she put it, "probably thought they were coming to see Gracie Allen." Her repertoire consisted of such songs as "Turn Fanny's Face to the Wall, Mother." "We've Got to Keep Up With the Joneses," and "The Last Time I Saw Paris." With only a huge kerchief for props, she was in turn a ten year old Irish lad, a cockney street-girl, a grandiose prima donna, and a desperate old maid.

Completely at home, she did not hesitate to comb her hair on the stage with a big black comb, and the versatility of her smart black and cerise gown completely fascinated the fashion minded of the audience. The only time she ever has stage-fright is when she returns to the Palladium, a large London music hall which she considers her "home."

Songs are contributed.

People all over the world, many of whom have never seen her, send her the songs that she sings, although several are the compositions of her accompanist, Harry Parr-Davis. Toward the end of her program she announced that "now we're gonna have a bit of do," and led the audience in singing many old favorites as well as a particularly humorous ditty, "Walter! Walter! Lead Me to the Altar!"

After singing "O Bless America" as earnestly as anyone, Gracie Fields closed her performance with a war song written by Mr. Parr-Davis. The whole audience joined in the sentiment as she asked that they "Wish me good luck as you wave me good-bye," and applauded this great actress and entertainer who is doing her bit for Britain.

Preceding Miss Field's appearance, during the intermission, and at the close, the university band played several selections.

Barbs to hold costume dance Saturday

A costume dance with Barb Council furnishing the costume will be held this Saturday night in the Union ballroom beginning at 8 p. m. Nature of the costume will not be revealed by the committee since all decorations of the ballroom and novelties are centered in a surprise theme.

This strictly non-date dance may admit students on the quota system after things are under way to avoid preponderance of either boys or girls. All holders of barb a meeting of the Nebraska College Teachers of Education at the Lincoln hotel tomorrow afternoon.

The discussion will center around a talk at 1 p. m. on "The Workshop in the Professional Education of Teachers" by Dr. Kenneth L. Heaton, associate in charge of workshop advisory service of the Commission on Teacher Education.

Teachers of education from all colleges in the state have been invited to attend Saturday's meeting of the organization which has just been formed. Plans for future organization and election of officers will be taken up at a business meeting.

Language group finds illiterates very numerous

BOSTON, Mass. (ACP). Illiterates outnumber college graduates in the United States, according to the Modern Language Association of America.

The association's recent meeting here brought out the following facts:

Among 75 million adults in the United States there are 1 2-3 times as many complete illiterates as college graduates. One in every seven persons, or 14 percent, has a high school education.

Approximately half have not reached the eighth grade in school and a majority have such a low general reading ability that it "is not sufficient to provide them with a basis for thinking independently on many matters of importance."
