A bestial desire--destruction

With a little ingenuity, faults can be found in any institution on earth. And a few suggestive though groundless questions can make these institutions appear crooked, inefficient, or mismanaged as the person asking the question desires.

But does the fact that nothing is above criticism, justify so many people going out of their way to find trouble, and without investigating the true state of affairs, championing destructionism.

Like playing a game, sensationalists seize on rumors, and love to see what antagonism they can arouse. They seek to justify such actions on the grounds that persistent attacks will improve the particular things in question.

If this were the case, more power to them. But their explanations can be accepted only if they, in the same "attitude for improvement," offer better alternatives for the existing affairs. And if they can't offer such alternatives, and from contacts with them in the past we know they seldom can, they must admit that their critical attitudes are nothing more than hangovers of a bestial desire to destroy.

Here at Nebraska this condition has given vent to a general antagonism against the health department, phases of the Student Union work, and a number of student organizations. Many of the complaints may be justified; With regards to the health department it is probably true that some students don't get two dollars worth of good out of it, and there may be ways its services can be made more effective.

But those who are raising the biggest objections, are the ones that have studied the problem least. They are the ones that have no concrete suggestions for improvement, but have hit upon these organizations as objects of criticism. And they champion whatever group can run down these institutions most. They seem to feel a university--student antagonism, and seem to feel that the interests of the administration are something distinct and contrary to the interests of the students. Else there could be no explanation for the antagonistic feeling.

Since our interests are all the same, the creation of something better, lets offer constructive suggestions for improvement yes, but guard against needlessly and groundlessly questioning the activities of any group. Let's get facts before we form opinions; so that the bestial desire for destruction, can be countered by reason, and forces of construction can triumph.

Behind the News

Aid via the St. Lawrence

Headed for a senate battle is one of the controversial projects of recent decades--the St. Lawrence Deep Sea Waterway.

The advent of this issue is due to the fact that Prime Minister Mackenzie King, of Canada asked President Roosevelt to deal with the waterway as a part of the aid-to-England program in considering the exigencies of Canada's war-time needs.

President Roosevelt replied that he considered the project one of vital necessity and that it should be started immediately. Consequently, an executive agreement was negotiated and signed on March 20. For the United States, J. P. Moffat, minister to Canada, Adolf Berle, associate secretary of state and Leland Olds of the Federal Power Commission signed the agreement. The Canadian group was headed by Mackenzie King.

The estimated cost is placed at 266 million. Dams at Iroquois Point, and in the Long Sault Rapids are planned. The channel will be made 27 feet deep, all locks in the side canals will have a 30-foot capacity. Since this is at present an executive agreement, it will go into effect if the house and senate vote the money--which they can do by a majority vote.

That is important because former attempts to inaugurate the waterway have taken the form of a formal treaty between the United States and Canada. Such a treaty was supported by Presidents Hoover and Roosevelt, but has consistently failed to pass the senate. The last vote was taken March 14, 1934, when the senate voted 46 for and 42 against the treaty. This was 12 votes short of the requisite two-thirds for treaty approval.

At the present time, a number of senators are said to plan to fight the appropriation request on the grounds that this is not a defense need, hence it must be transacted--if at all--by a formal treaty.

A powerful opposition drive is being conducted by various eastern and southern cities and certain transportation committees. It appears likely, however, that the administration forces will carry the project to successful completion.

Here are the answers to the questions on campus rules of behavior which were run in yesterday's DAILY. The questions and answers were compiled by Dorothy C. Stratton and Helen B. Schleman with the help of students in colleges from Maine to California and published in their new book "Your Best Foot Forward". The book is available at the university library.

The answers.

1. Sometimes if you see that such a situation is about to arise, you can avert the difficulty by getting the information quickly from another person. Otherwise, there is nothing to be done except to say, "I'm very sorry, but I can't remember your name at the moment," whereupon the other person should give his name immediately.

2. In small schools, being a student in the same college serves as sufficient introduction for a greeting on the street or for conversation. In large schools, being a member of the same class (unless it is a large lecture section of several hundred students) serves the same purpose. If you are in doubt, it is much better to speak and be friendly than to ignore the person.

"Redemption Merits Faith" will be given at 11 a. m. Mrs. Floyd McLain will speak on "Youth Supper" at 6 p. m.

3. There are four types of titles that you will encounter frequently on the campus. Unless you know that an individual prefers not to be addressed by title, an administrative officer or a professor should be given one of his titles in the classroom, in his office, on the street, and at college social functions.

4. Probably the best general advice on sandwiches is to be neat and don't ever let yourself look greedy. Tiny sandwiches of three or four bites certainly do not need to be broken or cut into smaller portions; but all other sandwiches, including wieners and hamburgers, should be, even at a picnic.

5. The man takes the initiative in ordering the dinner and usually suggests items that he feels he can afford. The man should not order for the woman without first ascertaining her preferences.

6. The man is not being penurious in the least to look over the items on the check and to verify the total.

7. When he is walking with a woman, a man must lift his hat to anyone to whom the woman speaks. A man may not ignore the person to whom his companion speaks, even tho the man has never seen the individuals before. The same rule holds if he is walking with another man.

8. He may lift his hat to an older man to whom he wishes to show respect; a student may properly do so to a professor.

9. If a boy asks for a definite date giving the girl the freedom to choose whether she will accept it, he will see that it is much more of a compliment to him for the girl to accept if she has the chance to refuse him than if he gives her no choice.

10. The sentiment is strong that the girl should be consulted before any trade is arranged.

Average yearly earning of a student working on the University of Minnesota campus is $100.
