Texas School of Mines . . . Coeds travel four thousand miles for poll on their beauty . . . then claim superiority

EL PASO, Tex., April 18.—With polls being the fad, students of the Texas School of Mines pulled a fast one, by sending their coeds over 4,000 miles to poll opinion on their beauty. After running the gauntlet of public opinion from Oklahoma to Hawaii the students claimed the mythical American Intercollegiate "School-of-Beauties" championship. Statesmen, talent scouts, and the men-in-the-street all agreed that never before had they beheld such a collection of "all-American beauties" on any campus, in comparison to its enrollment. First beauty poll. The beauty poll, first of its kind in the annals of college history, carried reports that "the Mines" girls made sailors in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, forget the Pacific belles and the shadow of war, to look and marvel at the coeds from the El Paso school. Talent scouts representing major Hollywood motion picture studios added their voices to the "glamour poll" when they exclaimed that the coeds in a body exclaimed that "the Southwest's has given El Paso and the College of Mines more than its share of pulchritude." Casting their affirmative votes in the beauty census, the scouts concluded that "the campus teems with beautiful girls who are superior in loveliness to any coed organization we have had the pleasure of contacting." The college has formulated plans to defend their newly acquired title by challenging any American contender for the "Crown of Beauty" championship to an actual contest, the details of which will be announced later.
