We Predict That Huskers Will Win Saturday by 49-0

In an analysis of six different systems of prediction, the Daily Nebraskan sports staff discovered that, on a basis of winners' points compared with losers' points, Nebraska will be 49 points better than Kansas State when the two teams clash at Manhattan next Saturday afternoon.

The six systems considered were:

- 1) the points-gained-per-game record of the Wildcats.
- 2) average of winners' point total over losers' point total in the 25 games played in the series to date.
- 3) comparative scores of games played this season.
- 4) the "mumbo-jumbo" system, wherein numbers are drawn from a hat.
- 5) pre-season prediction in Street and Smith's Pictorial Football Yearbook.
- 6) the outcome as hoped-for by a Nebraska University freshman.

Gaining on Opponents.
If the Wildcats from Manhattan can continue the points-gained-per-game record they have made to date this season the score at the end of the game will read 9-0 in favor of the Kansans.

In three games, Kansas State has been defeated 51-3 (Northwestern), 35-0 (Missouri), and 16-0, (Oklahoma), with the second and third games' opponents chalking up a 13 and 19 point marginal improvement, respectively. On this basis the marginal improvement of the fourth game over the third game should be 25 points, which means K-State will win 9-0.

25 Game Average.

If the average number of points the two teams have scored in their 25 meetings is considered, Nebraska will be seven points better than the Wildcats, since the Nebraskans have bettered the Kansans by 389 points since 1911, when the series began.

If comparative scores of conference games played this year are the basis for predicting the outcome, Nebraska will defeat the boys from Manhattan 29-0. While Missouri was only six points better than the Huskers, the Tigers romped over Adams' team to the tune of 35-0, a difference of 29 points.

That Odd System.

Using the "mumbo-jumbo" system, the score "50-0" was drawn from a hat; on the next drawing (to select the team winning by that margin) "Kansas State" was the name appearing on the slip of paper—which means that the Jones boys are 50 points to the bad.

However, Nebraska will move past Kansas State by a 20-0 score according to the pre-season prediction appearing in Street and Smith's Pictorial Football Yearbook.

Frosh Optimistic.

An arts and science freshman from McCool Junction, Neb., stated that he hoped "the score will be about 797-0 in favor of Nebraska," when questioned by a Nebraskan staff member.

After debating at great length on the relative merits of the various systems, the general consensus of opinion of members of the sports staff was this: Nebraska will win, safely—and it won't be by "mumbo-jumbo."

Flash—They proved it!

Since we last spoke our thoughts via this column concerning the official's ruling Saturday, there has been an opportunity to see what actually happened against the Tigers. Reports on the picture are exactly opposite as could have been predicted as soon as the play had occurred. The Tigers are holding to one line of thought and the Huskers to another.

Without a doubt, according to the pictures, Harry Ice was guilty of interfering with Kenny Simmons on the play in question and the field judge as the pictures proved was not in position to see the play clearly. The other play with Gerry Kathol in the main role showed positively that Kathol caught the ball, fumbled it but scooped it back into his arms two feet above the ground. The Tigers agree differently, however.

The official, ruling on this play stated afterward that he was in a perfect vantage point and that as he saw it Kathol had scooped up the ball on the rebound. For that reason he called the pass incomplete.

Let it drop at that—

Now that we do know that there was a good chance for the Huskers to have scored with a first down on the five yard line, there is nothing to do but relax since the game is over. In the future our luck will change and with the extra lift that this knowledge gives us, players and fans alike can turn undivided attention to Kansas State which will probably be a tough one. With this last dissertation we officially drop the "Missouri incident" along with Cornell's fifth down!

The subject of Kansas State brings up several matters. The K Staters have had a poor football season so far with four games under their belts. In the first game of the season Hobbs Adams' teams were forced to tie Fort Hays State, 0-0, then followed successive defeats to Northwestern, 51-3, Missouri, 35-0 and Oklahoma, 16-0. This puts plenty of experience on where it's needed

Mizzou on Top of Big Six Heap After Win Saturday

BIG SIX STANDINGS.
	W	L	T	Pts
Missouri	3	0	0	80
Oklahoma	1	0	0	15
Nebraska	2	1	0	46
Kansas U.	1	1	0	13
Kansas State	0	2	0	0
Iowa State	0	3	0	13

and the sophomore studded team has been rounding out greatly since the first tilt of the season.

When the Huskers play Saturday before the homecoming crowd, they will also be playing before former greats of the Manhattan school that felt the thrill of humbling the Huskers. Among these are Henry Cronkite and Elden Auker. The former was an All-American end from the school and Auker is a professional league pitcher now that landed on the all conference team in 1931 when the humbling took place. For the three years ending in that season the two teams put on a show that has never been forgotten.

The P. E. majors have another tennis champion in their ranks this year. She is Mickie McPherson, freshman, who copped the city singles, participated in the winning mixed doubles team, and came thru to win the state tennis championship this last summer.

Activity is increasing in the Big Six grid camps in getting ready for Saturday that will see four conference teams pitted among themselves and the other two teams taking on non-conference foes.

Touring the Big Six strongholds:
Nebraska: Huskers after seeing that there were mistakes that cost them the game against Missouri, perhaps, are planning to rebound in a loud tone against Kansas State Saturday. Last year the Huskers won by a 20-0 score.

Shakeups are on top after injuries and poor showings opened spots for advancement. Nebraska has to win all of the rest of the games in the conference and Missouri has to lose one to put both schools in a tie for the title.

Kansas State: The Wildcats are plotting to break into the win column over the Huskers since in four starts they have not won. Playing before a Homecoming crowd and before the stars of ten years ago that beat Nebraska, Kansas State's team might find the two impetus enough to go out and win.

The home team has lost but one game in the Big Six and that to Oklahoma. They did not play last Saturday, getting ready for the approaching game.

Oklahoma: The Sooners gunning for the conference title are in high gear following their upset 16-6 defeat of Santa Clara. They have been defeated once this season by a lop-sided score tossed their way by Rose Bowl bound Texas. Oklahoma is using a new offense that appears to be paying dividends and will be heavily favored against Kansas U.

Kansas U.: After winning their first conference game in two seasons, the Jayhawkers have developed a great deal of confidence in their driving power. By defeating Iowa, 13-0, Kansas showed that they more than likely would be at the top of the second division.

Missouri: The Tigers look like they are on the way to another loop title with three wins to their credit. They would have to lose one game to be forced into a tie with Nebraska, if the Huskers can cop their remaining struggles.

This week the Tigers head toward Michigan State where they will be slight favorites to continue their win streak.

Iowa State: The Cyclones are resting at the bottom of the conference ladder with little hope of climbing more than possibly one rung. More than likely Iowa will be able to dump Kansas State into the basement and remove themselves from the unpleasant position.

They will be trying to gain some prestige when they journey to South Dakota in a non-conference tilt.
