Honored Students More Successful . . . Boucher Says at Michigan

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (Special). Honor students are more likely than any other group to achieve success and become leaders in their respective fields after graduation from college, declared Chancellor C. S. Boucher in addressing the University of Michigan honors convocation Friday.

"Hundreds of students in scores of universities have shown remarkable uniform results," said Dr. Boucher. "It has been shown beyond question that there is a high correlation between the quality of high school records and college records, and between college records and professional and graduate school records. And this correlation carries on between university records and successful performance in careers in professional, commercial, or industrial pursuits after graduation."

It looks as though the discovery of the possibility of making tapioca from pure Leoti sorghum grain is really beginning to amount to something. Not long ago, Chemist Sandstedt and others at the Nebraska experiment station discovered that the peculiar type of "waxy" end sperm of Leoti sorghum lends itself to manufacturing the type of starch secured originally from Cassava from the East Indies. This supply has now been cut off by the war.

Sorghum Grain Bright Page.

The bright spot in developments of use of the grain to replace starch from the Indies came yesterday in a report there will be a market for pure Leoti sorghum grain in Nebraska this fall. A large eastern industrial concern has advised Sandstedt of the ag college experiment station to that effect. Furthermore, this company wants to buy a carload of the pure seed immediately for further experimental purposes.

The Leoti must be pure to be suitable for the industrial use and farmers having some of this grain were urged late Saturday to send it in for testing. The ag college chemistry department already has tested some samples and (See AG, page 2.)
