IF all the confounded puzzlement which surrounds this issue persists Saturday, the gridiron field at Iowa will resemble a prize Sunday crossword puzzle instead of a greensward.

AMATEUR grid enthusiasts, upon whom friends have come to look as experts, herewith have the opportunity to cement their position. Simply pick the victor: Iowa or Nebraska

CONSENSUS around this bedlam of mayhem (the Rag office) has it that Nebraska will triumph, preferably by a touchdown. Then there's the opinion of Dinny Ford, of the Kappa Amazons. Miss Ford, who follows football like she shoots bunnies, predicts elsewhere on this page that Iowa will triuniph by one point.

"THOSE Hawkeyes are hitting this year," Miss Ford explains, "and they scored 27 runs against Washington last week. Why, they're better than the Cards!" Washington last week. Give that Copenhagen back to the fireplace, Dinny. SKIPPER Glen Presnell, silent head man of the Cornhusker tribe, finds himself cast in a different role as his charges hit the final stages of their "before-lowa" preparatory chores.

NEVER one to bite into a peach when a lemon is handy, Presnell is set to open his career as head coach against the Hawks. So Pres is naturally quizzed several score times daily about the ultimate outcome. "Let the quarterback club handle it," he'll say. We've quizzed enough sideline quarterbacks to arrive at four conclusion. 1. IN Tom Farmer, Iowa has the - top passer on the field and a constant offensive threat.

- 2. IOWA already has the value of one game's experience and the lineup has been adjusted.
- 3. BOTH teams feature inexperienced hands at the vital pivot and fullback slots.

On furlough from his headquarters in California, Browne showed evidence of the California sun. The amiable ex-Husker tutor was impressed by the size of the current Scarlet laddies. "They'll make it a long afternoon for any team."

Big Six Elevens Face Starters Minus Centers

Filling the center slot on at least three of the Big Six squads has grown into quite a headache for mentors Ray Donels at Iowa State, Oklai.oma's Dewey Luster and Glenn Presnell of the Cornhuskers

Probably the most touching case is Iowa State where the failure of Clair Ethington, likely prospect for the spot, to return to school forces Donels to alternate Laverne between tackle and McGraw center.

Dewey Luster at Oklahoma has practically the same problem and has also tried shifting his tackle, namely Stan Green, to the pivot position, but any way you look at it that's sort of robbing -Peter to pay Paul setup.

Forrest Bachman, the only experienced center on the Lincoln squad sprained his wrist in practice and may be out of the Iowa. game, leaving Coach Presnell guessing.
