Students Will Be Warm This Winter If Coal Supplies Remain Stationary

Students will keep warm in classrooms on city campus first semester if incoming coal supplies remain at the present status, according to L. F. Seaton, operating manager of the univedsity. Ag campus students may be fairly sure of warm classrooms all winter, for the present coal supplies in the ample ag eampus storage bins will be sufficient if the room temperatures are maintained between 70 and 72 degrees.

It is becoming more and more difficult to obtain additional coal supplies. Only one or two carloads of fuel a week can be obtained instead of the six carloads which have been ordered. The menace of the coal heating in the storage bins has been almost negative up to the present time, but as more coal is added to the bins, the possibility of a major fire becomes great.

In order to alleviate the coal shortage and maintain present classroom temperatures Mr. Seaton stated, "It is a matter of co-operation of all faculty members and students to keep windows of classrooms closed when the rooms are not in use, and the othaining of more fuel supplies."

Seaton also stated, "If government regulations demand that temperatures be lowered to the proposed 65 degrees temperature, the university will comply."

Because the newspapers themselves can't be obtained except at excessive cost, a group of libra-ries from all parts of the United States are co-operating in a movement whereby the newspapers are sent direct to the Library of Harvard University. Here the issues for the past two or three months are copied onto Microfilm, copies of which are sent to the other libraries, one of which is the Library of Nebraska.

The papers ordered by the University of Nebraska Library are: Le Temps from France, Journal de Geneve from Switzerland, Carriere della Sera from Spain, and The furter Zeitung, a German newspaper was also ordered but, due to war conditions, no issues have been received.
