

Evolution of the Slack Changes Modern Coed

BY SPENCE PORTER.

Women's clothes, those indispensable little items and unmentionables, have been discussed, argued about, and fought over. However, there is a new addition to the modern girl's wardrobe. This little garment has just popped into polite society. It is the slack. Here we will attempt to attempt, among other things, to distinguish most girls in slacks from Bob McNutt in cords. Maybe this institution brought about the new dance sensation, "Mrs. Five by Five."

Slacks made their first appearance on the frame of super drooper Marlene Dietrich who created quite a sensation and almost eclipsed Garbo's size nines with her sensationalism. Marlene, however, could wear them with some success and the average lady movie-goer who goes to a show just to rest her feet decided this wouldn't be such a bad idea. So the tailors of the nation were hounded by a new and demanding clientel.

Next in Brooklyn.

We next see the slacks in Brooklyn where the goils find them so handy to carry pop bottles into the park unobserved or rather unnoticed. These female Ruffings could just pull out their bottles and let the ump have it and they wouldn't even lose the bottle deposit.

Comes now the war and all the men in uniform inspire the fair sex to go one step further in their copy of the man. Soon plaids and checks appear on the campus in great number and professors, especially those near sighted, have much difficulty with the personnel

Female Vandal Does Cosmetic Job at Dorm

So what if there is a moronic vandal in the dorm? Or maybe it should be vandals, because how could one person think up and execute so much skuldugery?

Anyway, someone thumbed their nose at the shortage of labor Tuesday about 1:30 a. m. Maids already overworked had to put in extra time cleaning up a mess that outdid most of the pledges' efforts on speak night.

An inch or so of soap chips, talcum powder, orange peels, and perfume covered the hall on the third floor of Love. Cold cream found an extra use on door knobs, telephones and mirrors. A beautiful shade of nail polish covered name cards and parts of doors.

"Fire" was marked on the fire extinguisher in nail polish and lipstick. T. P. was strung hither and yon. Miss Wilson even found sooty footprints on her floor.

The punishment has not yet been announced, but the main rumor is that the whole dorm will be campused, and that the dopes that did it will be expelled if they're caught. Is someone slightly scared?
