Nebraska U To Present 47th Annual, Consecutive 'Messiah'

. . . This Sunday

In 1895 a small group of Nebraska university students presented George Frederick Handel's oratorio, the "Messiah." This Sunday the University Choral Union of 400 students will give the "Messiah" for the 47th consecutive time.

The oratorio, directed by Dr. A. E. Westbrook, will be delivered at 3 p. m. in the coliseum. Admission to the performance will be free to both students and the public.

Handel's composition was written just 201 years ago and is the only work of musical literature to remain continuously popular for so long a period. The work consists of recitative portions, vocal and organ solos and choral responses.

The Choral Union is composed of the agricultural college chorus, Mrs. Altinas Tullis, director; the Grieg male chorus, Harold Avery, director; the University Singers II, Donald Glatty, director; and the University Singers I and the University chorus directed by Westbrook.

Assisting will be the university orchestra.

Prof. F. C. Blood, professor of advertising and sales management, talked to York chamber of commerce on Nov. 12 on "Future of Business."
