This has been a tough year for university students. Going to school in wartime has caused many male students to consider themselves "draft-dodgers," women to wonder if they are doing the right thing.

Whether justifiably or not, the college student has been the target of a lot of criticism. And it hasn't been his fault, for the average student just doesn't know what to do.

This week the Office of War Information released the results of a national inquiry directed at college students in connection with the war. The American Council on Education, the Association of American Junior Colleges, the National Student Federation of America and the International Student Service all cooperated in making the survey.

Here are some of the questions asked most commonly by college students with the answers of government experts in the bold face type.

What's the most useful thing to do before being drafted?

Keep studying until called. Get into good physical condition. Read about the new kind of war and why we fight it.

Can I continue my studies in the army?

Yes. After you've been in four months, enroll in the army institute or with one of 76 universities and colleges offering correspondence courses to soldiers.

Are more educated men really needed or should we all get into the army or production jobs?

So far as you are free to do so, it's wiser to continue your education but to direct your studies to great war usefulness.

What are the plans for training and using college women?

The War Manpower Commission is developing proposals for utilizing college

One of the choicest delights our civilization offers is the pleasure of hearing one author criticize another author's book. So we traveled to the city library last evening to hear Professor LeRossignol review John Andrew Rice's book "I Came Out of the Eighteenth Century." Mr. Rice was a member of Nebraska's faculty in the 20's, and was hired to teach Greek. Most people laugh when they tell you the last, for he would start his classes with a question like, "Would a young girl be safe on the streets of Periclean Athens?" and somehow lose the Greek.

We expected Professor LeRossignol to interpret the axe Rice is grinding, but all we got was a personalized summary of the book, and the information that Mr. Rice is a liar and a successful author because he does not care what he writes.

men and women in many useful war activities. These plans will be announced soon.

Is there an over-all plan as to the number of soldiers, workers, farmers and doctors or are we all to be put in the array in the hope the problem will work out right?

A policy for assuring each man his best possible chance for service is gradually taking form.

What kind of world are we going to graduate into after this war?

One thing is sure. We are not going back to where we are. The kind of work we will have after the war depends in large measure upon what we decide we want and how vigorously and intelligently we plan ahead to achieve the kind of world we want. Therefore, it is essential to think, not in terms of what is going to happen, but of what we want to attain.

In a way such answers by governmental experts is encouraging and morale boosting. But the general and abstract manner in which every question is answered implies that the government is not convinced of its replies.
