

Coed Fancy Turns To Dreams of Suits

BY BETTY KING.

Ah, Spring! That season for picnics, when daisies won't tell, when a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of love, and a girl's turns to thoughts of a new spring suit, (now how did that get in there).

Anyway it's true. You really can't blame a girl. A young man's fancy may change, but a suit remains a steady deal. That is especially true of the suits this spring. They're made to last for the duration. The really smart girl will choose a one good suit a year suit, such as the lovely pinchecked beige wool Harper's Bazaar is showing this month. The suit is simple and classic in cut with a slim pleated skirt and tailored jacket featuring slit pockets.

Silhouettes Slim.

One of the most important new silhouettes this spring is the waistcoat jacket and the slim, trouser-pleated and trouser-pocketed skirt. This combination looks particularly well in gray flannel with a huge watch fob displayed on the skirt.

The bolero jacket is returning to favor this spring because of the scarcity of material. This is good news for the short woman. The bolero silhouette was always one of her best suit silhouettes. She will like this style in chalk-striped gray flannel, white pique blouse, and three silver buttons.

If You Like Color . . .

For those who like color in their suits (and there's plenty of it this spring) there's a suit with a royal blue wool jersey jacket lined in citron green; a bright green skirt on a citron yoke, a white rayon crepe blouse. Incidentally this is one of the newest color combinations for spring. The theme of the designers of spring clothes seems to have been, "The brighter, the better."

Ah yes, spring is a wonderful season. Too bad most women spend it inside department stores looking for spring clothes.

Funds . . .

(Continued from page 1.) ment may be realized this spring if the army units are stationed here. However, if they are located here the university will not realize a profit.

"These units will be instructed by our staff members," Boucher explained, "and it will not only be a good way of keeping our staff intact during the war but will be a definite help to the armed forces that need the instructional units."

Discuss Salaries.

The salary increase "bugaboo" popped up again in the university salary schedules, with Senator Greenamyre, chairman of the committee, standing firm in favor of the measure.

The chancellor stated that the school has been losing key men to other schools because the university is not able to match the salaries offered by other institutions. He added that when the university was taken into the national association of state universities in 1909 it was a better school than it is today.

"Speaking in terms of national standing . . . we haven't gone down hill, other schools have progressed further in educational improvement than we have," explained Boucher.

Ask Improvement.

Greenamyre said that in his opinion the national standing of the university should be protected and improved as far as is possible under wartime conditions.

The merit system, based solely on educational contributions and not on the length of time the professor has served with the institution is practiced at the university, Chancellor Boucher explained.

English Prof Turns Illiterate In Movie Role

The first college professor ever signed to a movie acting contract, Don Curtis, has little opportunity to show his professorial perfection in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Salute to the Marines."

Curtis plays a hard-bitten marine lieutenant, and the script calls for a large number of "ain'ts," "dese," "dats," "dems," and "dose."

Having taught English and literature at Northwestern and Duquesne universities, Curtis is wondering what his former students will think when they see—and hear—his screen debut.

He's especially concerned about those he flunked in English.
