New Game Coming: Post-war Job Hunt

An OWI survey just completed shows that the question troubling college males the most was this:

"When they release millions of us from the army after the war, will there be jobs enough to go around?"

That is a serious question particularly for students who have invested large sums of money and time for college training to prepare themselves for jobs. What are their chances as against the millions of other men returning from war?

Congress is considering the situation now. The outline for a post-war America lies before it in the five-pound, 450,000-word National Resources Planning Board report on "Security, Work and Relief Policies."

There is a detailed section in the report on demobilization of men, machines and economic controls when war ends. It says, "We shall not be content this time to give each man $6 and a ticket home."

The reports deals at length with keeping the U. S. economy running during the transition from war to peace. Dismissal wages for soldiers, government supervision of industrial reconversion, aid in opening vast new areas for investment, assistance to industries in need of capital, enforcement of labor standards, initiation of a large-scale public works program—all these policies, outlined in the report, will determine whether there will be jobs enough to go around.

The only trouble with the report of the board is that thus far it has had a very cool reception. Five pounds and 450,000 words discourage reading, even by congressmen.

The program is reported too general, too unreal. As a matter of fact, no more money has been appropriated for the National Resources Planning Board. The administration has not pushed the board's report. Already many of its ideas are attacked, smeared and to an extent distorted.

However, in the five pounds there are recommended many measures which tend to be to the advantage of college students—a suggestion for more public aid like the NYA, for example.

The report is worth giving careful consideration; it can't be ignored. Perhaps, the report can lose some weight—get down to a few pounds—so that more people will read it, maybe see it in a solution to the problems of security after the war.

At any rate, here is something that attempts to answer the question: Will there be jobs enough to go around after the war?

Exams . . .

of these tests. Special aptitudes and general knowledge of the candidates, who will express their service preference at the time of the examinations, will be determined.

Navy Ineligible.

High school graduates, seniors in high school who expect to graduate this spring, and college students are eligible to take these examinations if they are not already enlisted in navy V-1, V-5 or V-7. Students who are enlisted in the ERC are eligible to take these examinations but it is not required.

Those who take the qualifying tests do not obligate themselves in any way nor will their status with their local draft boards be affected in any way.

Specify Age Limit.

The navy has specified the age limit as being 17 and not having reached the 20th birthday July 1, 1943, while the army places the age limit at 17 to 22 years of age at the same date.

The programs offer training at the college level in a variety of skills and professions needed in the armed services, and the training courses vary in length from two to twelve terms of sixteen weeks each. Choice of institution and choice of course will be given every consideration, but cannot be guaranteed.

Name Ranks.

Students selected by the Army will be given 12 to 13 weeks of military training before beginning the college program. Students selected by the Navy will begin college training July 1 or November 1, 1943, without previous military training. Successful candidates will be given the rank of either a private or apprentice seaman with active duty status, the pay of this rank, subsistence and uniforms.

Dean Thompson stated, "Most of those students accepted for either the army or navy programs will become commissioned officers in the army, navy, marine corps or coast guard."

All Pomona college men are now required to pass an agility-obstacle course test to determine their physical fitness under standards set up by the military services.
