GI War Show Tryouts Commence Next Week

Tryouts for the War Show, first venture of the Army into the field of theatrics on the Nebraska campus, will be launched next week with the final cast expected to number over 100.

Promising to be as versatile as a GI chow hound, the "khaki-koed" revue will introduce entertainers from every field, many of whom performed as professionals before donning the khaki of Uncle Sam.

A touch of Nebraska will add glamor to the GI musical which will be presented to the public late in January, under the sponsorship of the War Council.

Jean Swarr and Gerry McKensie were appointed by Mr. Martin, supervisor of the show, to be co-directors. Soldier representatives from each company, appointed by the military department, met with the war council committee Monday to plan the review.

Soldiers interested in trying for parts in the show must contact the following company representatives before this Friday: Jack Baker, Co. B; Henry Hoffstot, Co. C; Wesley Leuking, Co. E; Frank Tatanus, Co. F, Air Corps and Company A did not send a representative to the meeting yesterday and they are urged to contact Jean Swarr at the DG house before Friday for details of the meeting.

Another meeting will be held Friday in Room 315 of the Union at which time the representatives will turn in a list of the individual talent from their respective companies.

Tryouts will be scheduled according to companies Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Speedy B-Men Triumph, 34-26 Over Air Corps

Topping all previous contests in speed and spirit, and bordering somewhat on the spectacular, Hessler's Hustlers last night fought their way to a 34 to 26 win over the Air Corps. Company B holds the lead as the round-robin tourney goes into its second half, and it looks definitely as tho the decision will lie between Company B and Company C, with the former holding a slight edge on the strength of their 37 to 28 defeat of the Smithmen two weeks ago.

Nothing was lacking in last night's game.

Attendance was to be compulsory at first, but this order was rescinded at the last minute. Yet those who shied away from this seemingly "GI" basketball missed a contest as action-packed and thrilling as any we might have flocked to in our civilian college days. In short, it was a lulu.

No tourney precedents were broken when both teams started poorly. It seemed, too, that the tendency toward close games was to be adhered to also, until late in the second half when Company B broke away from a 22 to 22 deadlock to score 12 points to the Air Corps' 4.

Air Corps Takes Early Lead.

Brady and Jessen were the first to hit, and after gaining a 5 to advantage in the opening minutes, the Hustlers slipped to the short end of an 11 to 5 score. Fuller then dumped in a foul shot, Baker followed with two baskets and Scheer with one, while Rogers bucketed one for the Birdmen, and the half ended at 14 to 13, favor of Company B. In the second half fevers mounted high as the lead see-sawed back and forth between the two teams. Towards the end, however, the Hustlers found their groove with Brown, Fuller, Scheer and Jessen hitting the hemp consistently.

Pistol-Packing Mama Plays Too Roughly

(Ed. Note: Our well-known Field House critic and journalist ventures into the field of music—and gives us a good review of "the dream song of the century.")

You don't realize how silly these modern songs are until you analyze them. Take "Pistol Packing Mama," for instance.

"Drinking beer in a Cabaret, and were we having fun—'Now who is he trying to kid, Cabarets are so crowded these days you simply can't have fun in them, and your darned lucky if you can get IN one. And I understand they're trying to ration beer now; one jigger to a person."

"Until one night she caught me right, and now I'm on the run." So now he starts ariing the dirty linen. She caught him right—at what? That's what I'd like to know. And don't believe it when he says he's on the run—no one's running these days—wears out shoe leather.

Pistol? Where?

"Lay that pistol down, babe, lay that pistol down, Pistol Packing Mama, lay that pistol down." Where did she get that pistol? I thought the army commandeered all of them. You can't even get BB guns any more. Frankly, I think we could use this Mama as a commando—she seems to know all the tricks.

"She kicked in my wind shield, she hit me o'er the head." You see! She'd make a perfect commando. The guy doesn't mention it, but she probably used Judo on him, too.

"She cussed and cried, said I lied, and wished that I was dead." Isn't that just like a woman? She's not content with kicking in the poor guys windshield—no—she's got to cuss him out, and I'll bet 10 to 1 she did it in public.

Now, don't you see how ridiculous it all is? Why don't we go back to the good old days when "Eadie was a Lady," and then we'd all have a roaring good time with, "The Bird in the Gilded Cage."

Turkey Dinner Features AST Thanksgiving

Tomorrow promises to be a good day for the ASTP soldiers on campus. First of all, no reveille, then no classes all day, and no study hall at night. As if this isn't enough to be thankful for, there's Thanksgiving dinner—and what a feed is in store for the trainees.

Dinner starts off with fruit cup, followed by the traditional turkey and dressing, mashed potatoes, giblet gravy, cranberry sauce, buttered new peas, lettuce and tomato salad, celery, hot rolls and butter, pumpkin pie, coffee and milk. And there'll be plenty of time to eat the feast, too. The schedule is planned so that the men will eat in three shifts, at 11:30, 12:30, and 1:30—with plenty to eat guaranteed for all GI's.

A buffet supper will be served starting at 5:30 at night, with the men serving themselves. They'll also have to wash their own dishes—the staff expects that the number of dishes used will be at a minimum.

Something else quite different from the usual army routine, will be the invitation of two Nebraska coeds, Betty Huston and Monica Ann Alberty, as guests for dinner. The girls are going to write their impression of Thanksgiving dinner in an army mess hall for the Daily Nebraskan.
