Alice Visits 'Pitcher' Wonders

★ ★ ★ ★
Walrus, Carpenter Compete with Art Exhibit for the Craziest Combinations

By Ruth Korb.
"Pitchers" to the right of me "pitchers" to the left of me, and I am left in complete bewilderment. Could this be the great art exhibit I had heard so much about? My heart is in my throat, my knees are shaking, and my head is spinning—I know, I'm in wonderland, and my name's Alice.

I see a beam of light from some hidden window, and my senses come back to me. I'm still in Morrill Hall, looking with glazed eyes upon "modern art." Anyway, that's what they told me at the door.

Feathered Violins.

Not even pretending to appreciate the finer points of this great culture, I wander around, completely oblivious of color combination, shading, and idea, enjoying myself in no uncertain terms. Take that picture over there for instance—the name plate says "Pampas Grass," but to my befuddled brain, it looks like a violin just had baby feathers. For that's what I see—a violin, feathers, a water pitcher, and a carriage.

Another picture, consisting of a skeleton of a walrus, a candle lamp, and a table with fruit on it, might be captioned "That 198 percent proof alcohol finally killed off father, but it preserved his bones." The painter liked "Winter" better.

It'll Slay You.

If you are ever troubled with a bad case of indigestion, please come and look at "The Cabbage." It will really slay you, and I do mean really. It is painted with every color in the rainbow; sits upright in the middle of a grassy plain, and spreads its rainbow leaves to the winds. Nothing but poetical.

I came upon another great literary work, that was reminiscent of a blackout. Here and there was a slight glimmer of light. "Brooding Night" was its name, but that painter can't fool me—that's Sherlock Holmes looking for Dr. Watson with his little microscope.

If you should ever want to take a trip to "The Coast of Nevermore," one artist thinks a golden ship would be just the thing to

Trainees Start Third Term Here, in Omaha

Over 500 AST trainees will start the next term at Nebraska on April 10, it was reported by authoritative sources yesterday. Confirmation as to the exact quotas in the several phases of the Army Specialized Training Program which will definitely continue on campus is expected today from Seventh Service Command Headquarters in Omaha.

The unofficial report that advanced engineers, dents, pre-professional dental and medical students, AST Reservists, as well as the medical students at Omaha, will begin their next 12 week cycle cleared up the prevalent doubt on campus that Nebraska's entire ASTP contingent might suddenly be transferred. According to the latest information available, these assurances of at least the partial continuation of Nebraska's ASTP in no way affect the status of the approximately 600 basic engineers. There have been no plans made for retaining these men after the completion of the present term, and they are expected to leave the campus at any time. The question of the fate of the area and language group is still undecided, but the university has as yet received no word that they should not go ahead with plans for a third term for the A and Ls.

Excluding the 290 members of the air corps training detachment, which will go on reducing its numbers thru graduation as previously announced, approximately 540 trainee-students will go on with their education at Nebraska next month. Eighty-five advanced engineers are expected to continue their studies, along with 69 dents, and 209 medics who are enrolled in the School of Medicine in Omaha. Also in uniform on campus will be approximately 75 ASTRPs, and perhaps more although no further expansion of UN's reservist program has been announced. The pre-professional medical and dental course will be represented by about 100 trainees.

STAR Unit At Ag Closes On Monday

Uni May Use Army Quarters

Last contingent of STARS will leave ag by Monday, when the specialized training and replacement unit will officially close down, according to an announcement made by Chancellor C. S. Boucher yesterday. Col. James P. Murphy, UN military commandant, confirmed the fact that the UN unit will shut down Monday with the transfer of the final remnants of STARS.

The STARS moved into the newly constructed foods and nutrition building on ag campus last spring, and have assigned men all over the country since that time. During the past several months the number of men stationed at the unit has been gradually decreased in prospect of the eventual shut-down.

Unless the army wishes to make further use of the building in the near future, Boucher said, it will be returned to the home economics department. Soldiers have occupied the building since its completion and consequently it has never been used by the students.

SURE AN' ST. PAT'S DAY BRINGS OUT THE GREEN

"Sure an' what is all this blarney I'm hearing about St. Patrick's Day and the warin' of the green," students were asking themselves today. Some of the intellectuals took it upon themselves to investigate the matter.

"The dictionary is the thing," they said. "Mmmmm, St. Patrick—see ORDER, n. 1. St. Patrick—cabbage—see London Pride. The season when partridge hunting opens in England. Can't be! Now wonder, that's St. Partridge Day. ORDER, n. 1., wonder what means. May as well look it up too. 'Quis separabit'—white shield with shamrock. Getting nowhere. Try Holiday—only says something about March 17. OK, so this is March 17; right back where it started from. Webster's Collegiate was no Irishman. Also Funk and Wagnell.

Nice color, green. Seems like there is something about the blarney stone too, and shamrocks—for luck. Coeds wear green. This is leap year. Might be green for dear old St. Pat, or it could be green for envy of the other coeds who didn't need the blarney stone or a shamrock for leap year luck.

And then there is the St. Pat's party at seven this evening in the Union ballroom, as Irish as Paddy's pig. Also the color orange—which has something to do with southern Ireland, nothing to do with green, and lots to do with St. Patrick. Begorra, hoot mon, cheerio, and yipe!
