Reveal Identity Of Ag Goddess At Open House

Identity of the 20th Goddess of Agriculture will be revealed in simplified wartime ceremonies at 4:30 this afternoon as a feature of the open house activities on ag campus. The Goddess and her six attendants were chosen from the senior girls of the home economics department by a vote of all ag women.

As nearly as can be ascertained, the first Goddess of Agriculture was presented in 1924 at the annual Farmers' Fair. She appeared with her attendants on a float in a downtown parade. In later years she reigned over the pageant and other festivities of Farmers' Fair day, abandoned three years ago because of the war. On several occasions the Goddess was revealed at the annual ag spring party, the last one of which was held in 1942.

Two Informal Ceremonies.

The first informal presentation was made last year on the outdoor stage on the east campus, followed by a community sing and a dance attended by students and members of the STAR unit.

Dave Sanders, president of ag exec board, will preside at the ceremonies, which will be preceded by two musical numbers. Following the presentation the ag chorus will sing "Country Gardens" and girls from the phys ed classes, dressed in peasant costumes, will stage several folk dances.

In keeping with the simplicity of this year's festivities, the attendants will appear wearing white skirts and pastel sweaters, and the Goddess will wear a pastel sweater and skirt.

Virginia Bobbitt, chairman of the presentation committee, announced that because of the recent rain, the affair will probably be held in the college activities building rather than on the outdoor stage as was originally planned.

Summer is always distinctive in summer. Red and white chambray, in either a dirndl or shirt waist type dress, gives that peppermint candy-cane appearance.

A brown and white gingham in large checks, with enormous pockets on the skirt, brown buttons down the front, and a wide brown leather belt, should appeal to any fashion-wise coed.

As far as summer formals are concerned, white cotton eyelet with wide black velvet ribbon threaded thru the off-shoulder bodice should be admired by even those males who claim never to be clothes-conscious. Pique, either flowered or plain, makes another smart summer gown.

Coeds Get Gay Fashion Ideas For Summer

BY ADRIENNE WAGGONER.

In spite of the seemingly interminable rains, coeds are beginning to think about summer clothes. There will be the usual gay variety of summer cottons and rayons in the stores this year.

In the flower brigade, glazed chintz will continue as a favorite, along with gingham and printed rayon. Checks, stripes and plaids will add their dashing note, with cotton chambray as a preferred material.

Bare midriff bathing suits are definitely in this year. Also many types of play dresses, one of which merely has straps in a contrasting color, over the shoulders. Another novel idea in the bare-back line is the dickey, complete with collar, buttons down the front, and a pocket, which turns out to be a halter when the suit coat is removed.

Gingham Is In.

Among the numerous tailored cottons to be had, a popular style should be the bright plaid gingham, made in shirt waist style, with white pique collar and cuffs. Black shantung with white accents
