An Ivy Day tradition was upset at the university of Nebraska Saturday when two queens appeared to preside over the annual festivities.

Polly Petty, Janet Hemphill Hold Ivy Day Court at UN

Two senior women, Janet Hemphill and Pollyann Petty, reigned jointly as May Queens over the annual Ivy Day ceremonies Saturday.

Cold weather forced the ceremonies into the shelter of the coliseum after the stage had been set at the customary spot on the lawn north of the administration building.

War-time informality. In keeping with the general war-time tone of campus affairs, the ceremony was shorter than usual and the queens and their attendants were in informal dress.

Announcing the arrival of the queens were two flower girls and a crown bearer. Identity of the queens had been kept secret.

Miss Hemphill and Miss Petty's dresses were white crepe with the new U-neck-line, finished with a wide bow of self material.

Bob Henderson Gives Ivy Day Oration on 'Reason For Today'

Editors note: This is the complete text of the Ivy Day oration given by Bob Henderson, senior in the university.

REASON FOR TODAY

Today we are facing a future that bears promise as no other great era ever has.

This is a rosy prediction to be sure—we have only our minds and bodies to know that such shall be the truth.

Argument is Justified.

Such an argument is one only of justifying what we do at this time. That we should remain in school with the hope of the class of 1944 is rendering a service entirely immeasurable.

Ivy Planting Solemnized By Tradition

By ELEANOR KNOLL.

With the traditional Ivy begun in a pot, the planting of the ivy, from which the university's great day began.

As they began to leave the stage, the presidents were called back. Urging, they drew forth a small red pot.

MB's Uphold Standards. This very Ivy Day the Mortar Boards are conferring honor upon 13 women (if my calculations are correct) who next year will hold sway in that honorary. It will be their place as for all men and women.

To the professors and the administrative faculty I give a like challenge. Lift yourself from the depths of books for some time each day to attempt to visualize the greater purposes of your teachings.
