The Wingless Victory was first produced in 1936 with Katherine Cornell playing the role of Oparre. The play is a vigorous dramatic tragedy of early New England. It was written in the same dramatic tragedy of early New England. It is written in the same form as Winterset which was awarded the Critics Prize in 1936.

Action in 1800.

The scene of The Wingless Victory is laid in Salem about the year 1800. The central figures are Nathaniel McQuestion and Oparre, his wife. Nathaniel is a sea captain who left Salem penniless but returns a wealthy man after an absence of seven years. With one exception the pleasure of the various puritanical members of Nathaniel's family is badly marred when they discover he has brought a Malay wife and their two children back with him. Deeply as he loves Oparre, the Malay princess who has shared both danger and misfortune with him, Nathaniel cannot help but feel the invisible finger of scorn pointed at him by the townspeople. For Oparre's sake he lends them money to consolidate his social position but they find this a weapon to be used to their own advantage.

The struggle of this man's soul when he is faced with a sudden choice between dishonor and the loss of his property or the loss of his dark-skinned family, and the magnificent self-sacrifice of the woman who has given up her native country and risked all she has for love, have never been more clearly presented. This story of Nathaniel and Oparre is one few can forget.

The play presents a problem to make people of all races understand and tolerate one another. The aim of the play is other.

Have a "Coke" = Welcome back

... or giving a returned soldier a taste of home

There's an easy way to make a soldier on furlough feel right at home. It's to offer him refreshing Coca-Cola. Have a "Coke" is always the hospitable thing to say. In many lands overseas, as in your own living room, Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes, —has become a happy symbol of hospitality, at home as everywhere else.
