Prohibition . . .

"Thousands will be out of jobs because of it".

"Prohibition encourages crime". "A moderate amount of liquor doesn't hurt anyone."

Another popular answer was that it is unfair to the boys in the service to pass this law when they aren't here to voice their opinions.

As to those who voted "yes," their main argument was that "it only corrupts peoples morals to indulge in intoxicating beverages".

Some said "No one really has to drink, and it only harms the body."

Another said that he would rather see liquor rationed instead of completely prohibited.

"Although it would be hard at first to make it effective, it would eventually work."

"There is more crime now than during prohibition".

"It only lowers the standards of living."

"Only gives hang-overs."

"It is only a downfall to college youth."

"It works in Iowa, why don't it work here?"

the crew not working propped their feet up on the seats and tried to study. Williams conversed in undertones about the lighting and make-up.

Confusion Only Natural.

The confusion was only natural. The first dress rehearsal wouldn't be complete without it. The planning and work that had gone into "The Wingless Victory" was evident. The actors knew their lines, the make-up crew knew to the minute how long it took to make-up a character, and the property crew could locate the props. Everything was planned and being executed for the first time.
