LARGE AND SMALL STATES.

The voting of large and small states creates one of the greatest problems in organizing the world for peace. Small states claim equality in sovereign rights and claim an equal voice in any world organization. They wish to contribute according to their size and wealth but vote according to their sovereignty. The great states must bear the great burden of world security. The British have provided such freedom and security on the high seas as the world has enjoyed for three and a half centuries. The small maritime states of northwest Europe have flourished on this British gratuity.

At times the small nations have furnished the easy starting grounds from which aggressors launch attacks upon their more powerful neighbors. The Lowlands have many times supplied the undefended frontiers by which aggressors pass around the defenses of their prudent and well fortified rivals to a rapid and easy conquest. The privileges claimed by small states and granted them by the great powers is clearly one of the greatest threats to enduring peace. The popular mind seems always ready to support the contentions of a small state against a great one. The greater states make concessions to small neighbors much more readily than they would to great ones.

Justice demands that small states be forced to face their own impotency. If they expect to be secured by a great power they should join the system of defense that they expect to rely upon, and give that power the use of their territory and resources. No person or people is entitled to enjoy the freedom of anarchy and to claim the order and security of its self-disciplined, orderly, and defense-supporting neighbors.

A world organization that gives to small and great nations an equal voice in its control is founded upon a false principle that will reduce the organization to futility. An international organization to succeed must be founded upon the just principle of the political equality of man. A man in a small state is entitled to only as much political weight as a man in a large state. It will be difficult to reduce sovereign states to proportional representation in a co-operative security organization. It is worth a great struggle and the peoples of the large states will have to make their stand. Enduring peace depends upon a foundation of sound and just principles.
