UN Students Attend Peace Meet at 3

Dismissal of classes between 3 and 5 p. m. today will enable every student of the university to attend the first committee meetings of the experimental peace conference, the conference planning committee stated today.

Since the first meetings of every committee will be important in determining policies and future meetings, the committee emphasized the importance of each student's attending the meeting of the committee in which he is interested.

Give Resumes

Committee chairmen, vice chairmen, speaking delegates, pressure groups and axis representatives when asked, will give a brief resume of the demands of each country, but student attendance at committee sessions is especially desirable, according to the committee. Faculty advisors will be present at committee meetings to give advice and information if needed, but they will have no vote or voice in committee proceedings.

At the first meeting and the other three scheduled meetings in February, the conference committees will draw up resolutions stating the position taken on the problem the committee discusses. In order that students become better acquainted with these problems and to have a better idea for further research work, the committee suggests that students sit in on the committee meetings.

Legs, Music, Men Reign At '45 War Show As Larson Parachutes, Hapeman Stutters

BY RUTH KORB.

"Quiet, youse guys! Rehearsals is about to start. Ernie Larson, take off your parachute and climb down from them rafters! Yenny, quit pinching that girl, and all of you, close your traps!"

Lucy Ann Hapeman, student director of the coming War Show, is attempting to get the actors in their places and the show on the road. She turns to me smiles winningly, and says, "Mardon me, Padom, but sometimes one just muse orce. Oh, you know what I mean." With that she leaves me to watch the stage.

I'm a little tired, so I close my eyes and listen. The voice of "Singing Sam" comes to my ears. No, it's Frankie. No, it's "Singing Sam." This can't go on much longer, so I reluctantly pull my eyelids open and take a look. At the piano are "Singing Sam" Foster and "Petesy-Baby" Frankie Anderson. Sam is composing and Frankie is singing his heart out. Sam walks away from the piano a few minutes later, and I am forced to center my attention on the strictly drape shape that Foster presents to my eyes. Any minute I expect him to twirl his key chain in my face.

Anderson raises his baby blue eyes to the ceiling, opens his mouth and three girls try to climb through the window screaming. "Let me go, let me go, God bless him." In the meantime, Larson continues to hunt for the rip cord to his parachute, and "Pincher" Yenny looks for the sexy cigarette girl that isn't there.

A flash of blond hair, a streak of lovely legs, and the keys on the piano vibrating viciously to the tapering fingers of the Strain twins playing, "Begin the Beguine." Russ Leger hums to himself unconsciously, and the disappearing three climb back into the window to hear this new sensation. Lucy Ann yells for the janitor to come and bar up the window.

The AOP's take their turn on the stage and give out with some of that good old "Can-Can" that warmed the hearts and the blood pressure of our fathers in their day . . . day for what? Silly question, wasn't it?

The rehearsal comes to a close, and Lucy Ann puts aside her throat atomizer and her whip and dismisses the group for the day. Frankly, from what I saw, I want to see the rest . . . beautiful legs, beautiful men, beautiful scenery, beautiful men, beautiful music, beautiful men. . . .
