

UN Announces Plans for New Sports School

BY CHUCK PETERSON.

Athletic Director A. J. Lewandowski today announced tentative plans for a coaching school to be held at the University this August 15-18 inclusive. The school was the result of a definite need for help for the wartime coaches of Nebraska's and surrounding area's high school teams.

Some of the famous coaches of the sporting world will be the instructors. The subjects "taught" will be eleven and six man football, basketball, baseball, and track. One of the most important will be Athletic Injuries. This last should be of special interest to most coaches, since a doctor is very seldom in the immediate vicinity.

The instructors for eleven man football will be Lynn Waldorf of Northwestern University and A. J. Lewandowski of the University of Nebraska. The six man football head coach at the State Teachers College of Merovo, Mo.

The basketball coaches will be Bruce Drake, head basketball coach at the University of Oklahoma, and Reves Peters, commissioner of officials for the Big Six, and coach in one of the Kansas City high schools.

For the track coach, the school will offer Nebraska's head track coach, Ed Weir. An assistant will probably be announced later.

Athletic injuries will be taught by Lonnie Cornell, the head trainer for all University sports. The baseball coaches will be three representatives from the major leagues. Who they are to be, will be announced later.

Mr. H. V. Porter will discuss rules in high school football and basketball; all aspects and little known facts of the rules will be taken up. Mr. Porter is the Secretary of the National Federation of High School Athletic Associations.

The school is designed primarily for Nebraska high school coaches, but any one is welcome to attend. The fee for the series will be five dollars.

doubled with age, is really Arlis Swanson, the memory of whose flirting Sabina in "The Skin of Our Teeth" is still green. Bob Samardick softens his thick Russian accent as Sascha in "Room Service," for the brogue of a Yorkshire lad.

Role of Minister.

Dewey Ganzel again gathers up the ministerial cloth to play Reverend Bronte, a role similar to that of the harsh minister whom he played in the first play of the season, "The Wingless Victory." Reverend Bronte strives to dominate the lives of his gifted daughters and remind them always of the superior genius of their brother, Branwell. As the play progresses, he grows increasingly blind from cataracts on his eyes.

Rehearsals of MOOR BORN indicate that shivers of emotion will needle their cold way down the spines of theater-goers when Gloria Beaumont (Emily) dies of exposure to the moor-winds, and again at play's end when Gene Hougsey (Branwell) expires following a drunken carousal aggravated by over-long exposure to the same moor-winds which brought death to Emily.

Director Hospitalized.

Dallas Williams, players' director, was stricken during the early rehearsals of MOOR BORN and hospitalized. He returned to school only Wednesday, after convalesce at his home. Dan Mullin, technical director in Williams' absence, shouldered the additional burden of director and will continue to direct MOOR BORN.

In MOOR BORN the University Players' bring to the Temple stage high drama, and tragic. MOOR BORN curtain rings up next Thursday, presents a special Saturday matinee and the final curtain will ring down Saturday night, April 28. (That's next Thursday, April 26 that the play opens, exclaims business manager Ghita Hill.)
