Coeds Map Intricate Strategy For 'Cavillera Rusticana' Date

BY JEANNE HICKEY.

There are many tactics to be used in acquiring the date. If you are smart, you will happen to have two tickets to "Cavillera Rusticana" this week end, and you will need someone to use the other ticket lest it is wasted. It makes no difference the age, weight or height of the person who occupies the seat next to you, but it is a necessity of life that the occupant be of the opposite sex.

Now that you have maneuvered your date, turn the tables, and coyly ask for the minute details such as the time, and how you're going to get there. Be sure to let him know you did 30 push-ups in gym and you are dead tired.

Now that you've proceeded this far, you're much better off than the average college girl. 'Tiz best not to leave your date to the mercy of the family, especially if you have a cute sister. Always meet your date at the door if you live in a dorm or a sorority house or the gentleman may latch on to your best friend. Never allow your hero within calling distance of your roommate or a crisis will follow.

Presuming you have made a fairly graceful exit, take care not to slip on the ice too often since an alteration in your appearance may result. When you are seated at the opera, sit on the tip of your seat so that you can demonstrate your interest and love for music. A few "Ohs" and "Ahs" are in order so he knows you are having a rip-roarin' time.

After the opera, craftily find out his financial status, and when you order keep in mind that he does need at least 50 cents to get along the rest of the week. Now the climax. Always carry a pea-shooter, and if he tries to hold your hand, a good aim at the middle knuckle, right hand, will suffice. Upon arriving home, a lengthy promenade around the house is necessary so people will know you finally got a date.

The last step to sure popularity is easy. Fill your piggy bank, and then just happen to acquire some more tickets to another good deal. You may be broke, but at least you're livin'.
