

War Sufferers Stage Spring Hunting at Veterans' Expense

BY ELLIE SWANSON.

As the gentle warmth of soothing breezes foretells the approach of spring and the growing sun renders feminine minds incapable of study, coeds, for lack of other interests, turn with flushed cheeks to the trapping of men. (Forgive me girls.) As fate would have it, registration lines predict happy hunting grounds. Optimists prophesy a man for every three girls provided with six legs (two apiece). And discharge buttons on one out of every two men snared tell of promising things to come.

It is only fair to warn these innocent veterans that the war has been a hard one... for the girls. Time has caused our lines to warp and lack of bait has made our traps a trifle rusty. However, subtle or not, we're dropping our handkerchiefs and conveniently mislaying our assignments, so beware, suckers.

Three "Types."

There are three types of girls: girls with good lines, girls with sex appeal and girls who don't date. Whatever their classifications however, their objective is the same. But that's a secret so I won't say that all girls want a good education. The sum of the story is that men affect women strangely and the results are both varied and interesting.

There will be, no doubt, persistent denials to this article. If you don't believe it, however, step into the Crib at any time during the day or merely watch class tactics closely. First, we see an available coed who has just discovered a discharge button in her "Sosh" class. Seeing an empty seat next to it (the man), she casually slips into it (the seat). Conversation livens from day to day, starting with the weather and subtly working into the swell band at the Pike Saturday night. Then, at the mention of his wife, interest suddenly drops off and she finds a new seat.

Romance Simple.

Oftentimes romance blossoms from these simple beginnings. The chief winners seem to be the "ego builders," the "sympathy seekers," and the "I wouldn't go out with you if I never had another date in my life type." But fortunately, if he plays his cards right, she weakens in a minute or two.

Well, since the angles are endless and my life is precious, I will cease this expose quickly. Before I close, however, I want to give a word of encouragement to any men who might have read this by mistake. Don't worry, fellows, it's painless!

Lyman Extolls Development Of Pharmacy

One of the "unheralded achievements of the twentieth century" is the development of pharmaceutical education and research to a high professional and academic level, according to Dr. R. A. Lyman, dean of the college of pharmacy, in a recently distributed brochure.

The brochure was distributed by E. R. Squibb and Sons to all members of the medical and pharmaceutical professions, druggists and pharmacy schools and colleges.

In his article Lyman said that since the founding of the American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy, steady increase in the scope of pharmacy courses has been achieved from a "short trade training course" to an established professional curriculum.

Dean Lyman pointed out that the most significant feature of this constant course revision was the greater stress on basic and biological sciences.

While curricula were being improved, Dean Lyman said that faculty requirements were raised, and at the same time, through the efforts of educators, licensed pharmacists were required to have pharmacy degrees before practicing, a practice now a law in all but three states.

The article continued with the statement that the United States government has made the pharmacist the custodian of drugs, responsible for proper distribution of products.

"The pharmacist is a guardian of public health," concluded Lyman.
