

Fellman Urges Bolder Action on Italian Policy

Dr. David Fellman, professor of political science, at the first of a lecture series sponsored by the university extension division, emphasized Wednesday night that American policy in Italy should clearly define our desire to establish democracy there and to eliminate the fascist heritage.

"We should give every possible aid and encouragement to the many democratic forces and impulses of the country," Fellman said. "We should refuse any support to the anti-democratic forces. It is of course difficult to translate this general policy into specific terms in concrete situations; but it still remains that we ought to know what, in sum, we really want."

Problems Still Exist.

Fellman declared that many major political problems now face Italy, among them the future of the monarchy, the property question, the purge of fascists and fascist influences, the threat of the rise of neo-fascism, the elections to the costituente (constitutional convention to be elected in April), the reorganization of local government and the revival of the tradition of municipal self-government, which is an old and deeply-rooted tradition in Italy.

Having just returned from the Army University Study Center at Florence, which offered him an opportunity to make a study of Italy's problems, Dr. Fellman believes that these political questions may be solved through five major post-war developments:

1. An experience of over 20 years of fascism, which has had the net effect of producing a politically illiterate and intellectually sterilized population.
 2. The disaster of defeat in a major war, with its accompaniment of physical destruction, military and civilian casualties and general demoralization.
 3. A post-war heritage of frustration, bitterness, inflation, starvation and nakedness.

Moritz Reports Acute Shortage Of Teachers

An "alarming" shortage of teachers, even greater than during the war years, is faced by Nebraska schools next fall, according to R. D. Moritz, director of the university's education service department.

Moritz declared Wednesday that the shortage would be caused by (1) a great number of veterans' wives retiring from teaching on the return of their husbands from the service; (2) insufficient number of veterans re-entering the teaching profession after discharge from the service; and (3) a steady decline in the number of teachers being trained by the university and other Nebraska teachers and denominational colleges.

Requests Received.

The teacher placement bureau of the university already has 75 requests from Nebraska high school and elementary schools. Moritz commented that this is far in excess of normal for the month of February, and predicted that requests would reach an estimated 2,000 by April with the probability of less than 500 teachers available to satisfy the demand.

Kosmet Klub officers have announced that there will be a meeting in room 315 of the Union today at 5 p. m., for all applicants interested in the Klub. Dick Folda announced that this will be the last chance for men desiring consideration for honorary membership in Kosmet Klub.

Edward Frederick Lindley Wood, the Viscount Halifax and England's ambassador to the United States, will address a student-faculty audience at a convocation in the Union ballroom this afternoon at 2 p. m.

According to arrangements forwarded by Lord Halifax's secretary, the diplomat requested that he should speak informally to a small audience of only students and faculty.

Lord Halifax will be introduced to the audience by Chancellor C. S. Boucher, who has not yet been informed what the topic of the address will be.

Mid-West Tour.

Touring the mid-western states, Lord Halifax is endeavoring to further explain American and British relations. He has held one of the most difficult jobs of the war for over five years.

When Halifax came to the United States on January 24, 1941, he encountered much anti-British feeling. Since that time Halifax has worked hard in an effort to promote a complete understanding between the people of America and Britain.

Instructors may dismiss classes for the convocation with the approval of the department head, according to T. J. Thompson, dean of student affairs.

The program will include many of Chopin's favorite selections, "C" (See PLAY, page 4.)

Awgwan's Out! Campus Takes Event Calmly

The Awgwan has been published. It has been more or less forced on the forewarned student body. At long last the unlucky ones who have a stray quarter can read all about the life and times of one George Tierney Shestak, the irrelevant story of the founding of the Campus Line, and Trippammer Peepash's incidental contribution.

The contents of this "humor" magazine are somewhat humorous, that is if you're in a humorous mood. Several jokes are thrown in, but the one redeeming line of print we noticed was the mention of the New York Times and the Daily Nebraskan in the same breath. We ignored the cartoon on page 13.

Uninspiring Issue.

This issue of the Awgwan wasn't particularly inspiring (is it ever?) but we'll excuse it. They have troubles, too.

Incidentally, anyone who might want to read this literary attempt may pick up their copies in the booth in the Union between the hours of 10 and 5 o'clock any day this week. They also sell subscriptions there, but that's beside the point.

STUDENT FOUNDATION.

Student Foundation will hold a mass meeting tonight in room 315 in the Union. Anyone interested in helping publicize the university is invited to attend, according to Margaret Neumann, retiring president.

Four Home Ec Majors Teach Homemaking

Four vocational homemaking education majors left the campus Wednesday for a month's teaching experience in the "off-campus" teacher-education centers. Doris Atkinson will be in Ashland, Lorraine French in Lyons, Vivian Ferris in Pawnee City and Lois Opper in Stanton.

The students live in the community, are considered regular members of the school faculty and carry on the in-school and out-of-school activities which are the responsibilities of the resident homemaking teacher. They will also have experience in teaching adult classes in homemaking.

Provides Teaching Experience.

The trend among teacher-education institutions is to provide off-campus teaching experience for their students, but at this time (See HOME EC, page 4.)

Nebraska Association To Open Annual Art Exhibit March 3

BY SUE GOLDEN.

University students will be given an opportunity to see free of charge what has been reported as one of the finest art exhibits between Chicago and the Pacific coast when the Nebraska Art association opens its 56th annual exhibition of contemporary art, March 3 at Morrill hall.

These exhibits, which have given many groups the chance to study and enjoy art for a number of years, have resulted in a greater appreciation of better art among Lincoln residents, several of whom now buy pictures for homes and offices from these exhibits.

Foundation for the coming exhibition was laid in 1888 when the U. S. court room of the postoffice building housed one huge oil painting, The Wise and Foolish Virgins, by Piloty. Fifty cents admission was charged to see the painting.

Sponsored by the Haydon Art club, which became the Nebraska Art association in 1900, shows increased in size and quality annually. The University of Nebraska co-operated with the association and this year's exhibition, to be held from March 3 to 31, will be one of the largest to date.
