

Summer School Plans Are Made

In anticipation of a record-breaking enrollment, expected to exceed more than 4,000 students, the university is preparing to offer its largest summer school program this year, according to R. D. Moritz, dean of the summer session.

Seventy percent of the veterans now enrolled on the campus indicated their intention to remain for the summer session, in a poll taken last week. An estimated minimum of 1,000 more veterans now in the process of separation from the service will swell the June enrollment, supplemented by a larger number of civilian students than in the past few years.

High Enrollment.

The arbitrary enrollment figure of 4,000 exceeds a previous high of 3,401 in 1927 and far surpasses the 1944 figure of 1,771.

Formerly the scope of the summer session curriculum was considerably below that of the fall-winter term but this summer the contrast will be slight, Dean Moritz said.

Complete Programs.

For the first time complete college programs will be offered in mechanical and civil engineering and in agriculture. The business administration college program will offer 25 additional courses and twice as many instructors. The arts and science college placed particular emphasis on languages, speech and journalism as part of their increased program, stated Dean Moritz.

He said plans have been made to offer a special course for high school graduates this summer which will enable them to procure the necessary credits for teacher certification to meet Nebraska's elementary school teacher shortage this fall.

"Some difficulty is anticipated in finding qualified instructors for some of the additional courses being offered, but we plan to utilize the increasing number of graduate students for part time teaching and grading papers," he said.

Dr. F. W. Hoover Talks on Practical Teaching Values

Teachers should lay greater emphasis upon practical rather than theoretical education, was the thesis of an address given by Dr. Floyd W. Hoover, assistant director of admissions at the university, to Nebraska City school teachers and officials Monday.

Dr. Hoover, discussing teaching and curriculum problems, added that, "Education in our nation has always been torn between two philosophies—one looks on a child's mind as a storage vault to be filled during his school years with knowledge upon which he can draw skills and attitudes as he needs them upon becoming an adult. The other says students should learn by doing those things which are useful to him now or, in other words, don't teach a child to write checks unless he is writing them now," Dr. Hoover continued.

Urging a compromise, Dr. Hoover said that grammar and mathematics have steadily declined in importance in high schools because emphasis has been upon theories instead of practical application in students' everyday life.

Hallet Abend Will Address UN Today

A discussion on Far Eastern affairs by the New York Times Asiatic correspondent, Hallet Abend, composes the slate of the university convocation this morning at 11 in the Union ballroom.

"Asia—The World's Tinderbox," is the subject of Mr. Abend's talk. Author of "Treaty Ports," "My Life in China," and "Ramparts of the Pacific," Mr. Abend is a blunt critic of our Japanese policies and notes that the United States in allowing the Japs to save face, is granting too much leeway in carrying out surrender terms.

Oriental Wise.

Mr. Abend will use the knowledge of oriental life and customs he has gained in 20 years of Chinese residence, in his talk. The author and lecturer has just returned to this country from a war department sponsored air jaunt thru Germany, Italy, Ceylon, Iran, North Africa, Palestine, India, Burma, and China.

On a six months vacation from scenario writing and Pacific coast newspaper jobs, in 1926, Mr. Abend went to the Far East. He lived there, continuing to write for the North American News- (See ABEND, page 4.)

Tall, Distinguished Scandinavian Holding Three Degrees Heads Extension Division; Correspondence Work and Evening Classes Offer Eleven Services

BY TOM GREEN.

The extension division of the university is a most fascinating place and the man who heads it, appropriately enough, is equally as interesting.

Dr. Knute Broady is a tall, distinguished Scandinavian as his name may imply. He received his B.S. degree from Washburn College, his M.A. in education from the University of Chicago, and his doctor's degree in education from Teachers College, Columbia university.

Kansas Teacher.

"Prior to coming to the university, I was high school teacher, principal, and school superintendent in Lincoln county, Kansas. I guess I went through the usual steps," he says.

According to Dr. Broady, courses offered by the extension division may be classed under two headings: correspondence work, and the work carried on in evening classes and in off-campus classes.

Eleven Services.

In all, the extension division lists eleven services which it renders. Among those eleven are the citizenship classes, audio-visual aids service, school building advisory service, traveling art galleries, speakers bureau for people in other parts of the state who want speakers and work done in the administration of institutes which usually runs from one to three days in length.

Most of this work is carried out by the regular members of the faculty, while the extension division acts only as a coordinator or clearing house of information. "The extension division would stop work tomorrow if the university faculty members did not consider service to the citizens of the state so important that they were willing to give their time to meeting their needs," affirms Mr. Broady.

7,000 Enrolled.

There are approximately 7,000 people who are taking courses by correspondence of which more than half are within the boundaries of the state. "However," says Dr. Broady, "there are some from almost every state and the territories including Alaska, and a few from foreign countries."

The enrollment from foreign countries is not solicited because of the unfavorable rate of dollar exchange for the foreign scholar. Mr. Broady points out an interesting fact in reference to the large enrollment from the territory of Alaska. The state of Washington is ordinarily looked upon as the paternal state of the territory, but the extension work of the University of Washington does not go below the college level, and therefore the people of Alaska turn to the state university with the most comprehensive correspondence program.

Top Course.

Dr. Broady continues: "We were the first university to open the field of high school extension and we still maintain the most comprehensive correspondence course (See BROADY, page 2.)
