BY JERRY COHN.

Sonny Dunham, the man who can switch from the trombone to the trumpet alternately, much to the amazement of musicians and doctors alike, said in an interview Saturday that his lips are so valuable that, while in Miami recently, he had them insured for a quarter of a million dollars.

The ability to play both instruments requires a different set of lip muscles, which is called embouchure. Insurance was needed because his lips are subject to paralysis at any time.

Sonny was formerly featured with Paul Tremaine's orchestra and Glen Gray's Casa Loma orchestra.

Authors Show Skill in Novel One-Act Plays

BY PATTY JENSON.

Gaylord Marr, author and leading actor of "New Tomorrow," an original one act play presented Thursday night in the Temple theater, showed promise in both fields in an intriguing story of a returned veteran suffering with an extreme case of war nerves.

The story was presented in a series of flashbacks with Bill Lucas playing the part of a reporter and narrating the action from an improvised platform to the right of the main stage. Marr and Lucas gave the outstanding performances of the evening.

Ann Proper was Kitty, the wife who the veteran felt had become disloyal during his three year absence. At times her characterization appeared to be somewhat forced.

Minor Roles.

Robert Wheeler, Rex Cosler, Fred Lorenz, Lois Jarman and Arlene Marylander gave convincing performances as minor characters.

Direction of Blanche Duckworth was remarkable consideration.

Teachers' Guidance Conference Meets April 8 and 9 for Training Instruction

A teachers' guidance conference convenes April 8 and April 9 in the governor's hearing room in the capitol building. The meeting is to be held for university's teachers college staff, the department of public instruction staff, the state educational association for public schools and for the other universities and colleges in Nebraska that train students for teaching.

Emphasis On Teachers.

Emphasis throughout the two-day meeting will be on teacher education. Special attention on Monday is to be on the summer workshop as a form of teacher training. That evening a dinner for the convention representatives will be given at the Cornhusker hotel. Dr. L. D. Haskew, executive secretary, Committee on Teacher Education, American Council on Education, and Dr.

Royce E. Brewster, specialist consultant in field service, Occupational Information and Guidance Service, U. S. Office of Education, will address the expected seventy-five dinner guests.

Nebraska's System.

The speakers are expected to view Nebraska's educational work and to inform the delegates of advances in instructional methods. Tuesday's meetings are to discuss the preparation of teachers for youth guidance of elementary and secondary school students. Also to be reviewed is the proposed high school and college program for training rural teachers. Under existing requirements it is possible for graduates of normal training high schools to qualify for third grade elementary certificates in teaching. This permits the instructor to teach in a rural school for three years without any college preparation.

Nebraska is one of three states that allows high school graduates to teach without college preparation. The convention will discuss the feasibility of the bill before the last session of the legislature which would require prospective teachers graduating from normal training high schools to have one additional summer session's training at some college. This would grant a certificate at the end of the summer session which would need to be renewed by taking an additional college summer session's work every year.

Sponsoring the convention are the Nebraska Department of Public Instruction, the Nebraska State Education association, Teachers College of the Nebraska university, and the Nebraska Department of Vocational Education.
