When Sinfonia presents its annual spring concert Sunday at 3 p. m. at the Temple, woodwind, piano and flute soloists will be heard as well as a 40-man glee club under the direction of Alfred Blinde, graduate member.

Temple Actors Close Season With Comedy

BY DEDE MEYER.

Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness!" last major production of the University theater this season, was received enthusiastically by the audience last night at its opening. The show, under the effervescent direction of Dallas S. Williams, tended to drag a bit during the first scene, but picked up through the evening to a closing scene that, combining the efforts of the actors Eugene O'Neill, and Omar Kahyyam, was a triumph of beautiful sentimentality.

The cast was exceptionally well-balanced. Perhaps the most outstanding bit of acting was done during the second scene by David Andrews, as Uncle Sid. Uncle Sid, in this scene, is slightly intoxicated, and he so delighted the audience that Mr. Andrews received an ovation upon his exit from the stage. Throughout the show, the characterization was excellent and Andrew's Uncle Sid can best be described, in O'Neill's own words, as a "card."

Bondarin Good.

Avrum Bondarin, as young Richard, played the youthful rebel with agility, but at times he used a little excess tension. Mr. Bondarin has a superb voice quality, (See THEATRE, Page 4)
